9. Erroneous or Irregular Judgments — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — It is well settled that where a court in which a judgment or decree is rendered has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin such judgment or decree for errors or irregularities in the proceedings leading thereto or in the judgment or decree itself,¹ and it is altogether immaterial that the judgment or the decree was unjust² or that the error was such as to warrant a new trial.³ So it is likewise immaterial that the judgment was rendered by default.⁴

b. APPLICATIONS OF RULE. — In applying the doctrine stated in the preceding section it has been held that a judgment will not be enjoined for the following irregularities and errors: Insufficiency of the evidence to support

10. Judgments Obtained through Unauthorized Appearance of Attorney — View that Injunction Does Not Lie if Attorney Is Solvent. — There is much difference of opinion as to whether a court of equity has jurisdiction to relieve by injunction or otherwise from a judgment rendered against a party on the unauthorized appearance of an attorney. According to some decisions, where a regular attorney of the court appears and answers for a defendant in a suit at law a judgment recovered by the plaintiff will not be vacated and execution enjoined by a court of equity though the attorney appeared without authority from the defendant, unless it be shown that the attorney is not of sufficient ability to answer for the damages caused by his unauthorized appearance, or there has been collusion between him and the plaintiff in the suit at law. In such a case redress must be sought against the attorney.⁴

View that Relief by Injunction Is Never Permissible. — In some jurisdictions it is well settled that a judgment obtained on an unauthorized appearance of an attorney will in no case be enjoined, whether the attorney be or be not solvent and able to respond in damages.⁵ In these jurisdictions the remedy at law is considered adequate, and to put it in operation it is not necessary that the attorney be unable to respond in damages.⁶ The usual remedy is by motion in the original cause to stay the proceedings on the judgment and to permit the party aggrieved to come in and defend on the merits,⁷ or by motion to set aside or vacate the judgment.⁸

1. Irregularities in Service of Process. — Bonsall v. Isett, 14 Iowa 309; Cooper v. Sunderland, 3 Iowa 114, 66 Am. Dec. 52; Morrow v. Weed, 4 Iowa 77, 66 Am. Dec. 122; Myers v. Pettitt, 25 Neb. 96; Mayer v. Nelson, 54 Neb. 434.

Defects in Writ. — It is not a ground to enjoin a judgment, that the notice of the suit in which it was rendered was without revenue stamps attached, Wilsey v. Maynard, 21 Iowa 107; or without the seal of the court from which it was issued, Krug v. Davis, 85 Ind. 309.

Less Time than Required by Statute. — It is not ground to enjoin judgment, that the service was defective in that the statute required five days' notice, and only four were given. Ballinger v. Tarbell, 16 Iowa 491, 85 Am. Dec. 527.

Procuring Service by Subterfuge. — It is not a ground for injunction, that the defendant, a nonresident, was enticed into the state and then served with process. Vastine v. Bast, 41 Mo. 493.

2. Defective Return of Process. — Logan v. Hillegass, 16 Cal. 202.

Suit Brought for Plaintiffs Without Authority. — When an attorney brings suit without any authority from the plaintiffs, and the defendant obtains a judgment for costs, a court of equity will restrain the enforcement of such judgment by perpetual injunction, if it be shown that the attorney is poor and unable to respond. Smyth v. Balch, 40 N. H. 363.

View that Injunction Lies Irrespective of Attorney's Solvency or Insolvency. — There yet remains a third line of decisions which do not square with either of the views already stated. According to these decisions the enforcement of the judgment obtained and resting upon an unauthorized appearance for the party may be restrained in equity, irrespective of the question whether the attorney is responsible or irresponsible, or acted by procurement or collusion with his antagonist.¹ Nevertheless it is incumbent on the party assailing the judgment on the ground of want of authority in the attorney to appear to make out a clear and unmixed case, free from fault or negligence on his part. Public policy requires this in view of the fact that it is easy for one party, especially after the lapse of time, to deny the attorney's authority, and difficult for the other party to show the authority. It is therefore a sound rule to require the party assailing a judgment or decree on this ground to show clear merits, to take prompt action, and to establish his right by cogent and strong proof.²

11. Judgments Obtained Through Negligence, Incompetence, or Mistake of Attorney. — A judgment will not be enjoined because of negligence, incompetence, or mistake of the attorney. If a party loses the opportunity of making his defense or of taking other steps necessary for the preservation or enforcement of his rights, by reason of the neglect, inattention, or mistaken advice of his own attorney, without any fraud or unfairness of the adverse party, it is in law, as between him and the adverse party, the same as if he had lost it by his own neglect, inattention, or fault.³ And the rule is in no wise affected by the fact that the attorney is insolvent and unable to respond in damages.⁴ In applying the rule it has been held no ground to enjoin the judgment that counsel managed the trial of the cause unskillfully;¹ neglected to file a plea for the party;² absented himself from court during the trial, intentionally or otherwise;³ failed to notify his client of the time of trial;⁴ advised his client to remain away from court;⁵ failed to introduce material witnesses;⁶ neglected to take an appeal within the proper time;⁷ lost the right of appeal through delay in signing the bill of exceptions⁸ or by neglect to assign errors⁹ or by failure to call up a motion for a new trial through the mistaken impression that such motion had been overruled;¹⁰ advised the party that the proof of a material fact was unnecessary, whereby the party failed to prove it;¹¹ failed to enter a credit on the execution according to agreement;¹² caused the rendition of a judgment on a stipulation, in disobedience of the client's instructions;¹³ or lost the right to new trial by adopting the statement of the reporter of the testimony taken down by him, without observing the errors in such statement.¹⁴

12. Judgments by Default or Confession — Judgments by Default. — Where a party having an available legal defense neglects to present it and suffers judgment to go against him by default, he cannot obtain relief against the judgment by injunction, in the absence of surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud.¹⁵ Where a judgment by default is obtained against a party by his own neglect, it constitutes no ground for equitable intervention that his adversary obtained more relief than he was entitled to.¹⁶ So, although the defense is lost by neglect of counsel, there can be no relief, as the attorney's neglect will be imputed to his client;¹⁷ and entry of default in vacation is likewise insufficient ground for an injunction where the rules of the court in which the judgment was rendered authorize the entry of judgments in vacation.¹⁸ It is a good ground for enjoining a default judgment that it was obtained through the fraud of the adverse party.¹⁹ In any event, to authorize relief by injunction from a judg-

Attorney Having Evidence in His Possession. — Where a defendant was well represented by counsel on the trial, which was fairly conducted, the fact that by mistake one of his attorneys, who had cumulative evidence in his possession, did not attend the trial, and did not arrive until the case had been submitted to the jury, and that the court subsequently refused to permit the party to introduce such evidence and denied his motion for a new trial, is no ground for an injunction to restrain the judgment. *Waldo v. ment taken by default it must be alleged and shown that the defendant has a meritorious defense to the cause of action on which the judgment is based,¹ that he has no adequate remedy at law,² and that the party himself is not guilty of negligence.³

Judgment by Confession. — Where a party to an action at law voluntarily confesses judgment he is not usually entitled to equitable relief against the judgment, unless without negligence on his part he was prevented from making his defense by fraud, accident, surprise, or mistake.⁴ A judgment by confession will not be enjoined because the warrant of the attorney who confessed judgment was defectively executed,⁵ nor because the affidavit to the complaint on which the judgment was rendered was defective.⁶ A judgment by confession procured by fraud may be enjoined.⁷ If judgment is confessed for a balance claimed, with the privilege of correcting errors, if any, it can be enjoined only upon proof of errors.⁸ To entitle a party to equitable relief he must show a meritorious defense. If the party seeking relief can say nothing against the judgment, equity will not interfere;⁹ and if the plaintiff in equity does not show a case for relief the injunction granted is properly dissolved on hearing, whether an exception has or has not been taken.¹⁰

13. Judgments Based on Gaming Contracts. — It has been said that "where the consideration for the contract on which the action at law is founded was money lost at gaming, and judgment is obtained against defendant, courts of equity are inclined to be somewhat more liberal in the exercise of their restraining jurisdiction than in ordinary cases, and upon considerations of public policy and the necessity of the prevention of gaming they will generally restrain proceedings under the judgment."¹¹ This is clearly a misstatement of the law relating to this subject. In a number of jurisdictions there are statutes which expressly declare that judgments based upon gaming contracts

Violation of Agreement to Satisfy Judgment Out of Certain Property. — Where a judgment was rendered by default upon agreement that it should be satisfied only out of certain specified property, it was held that an injunction was properly granted in an action by the debtor to restrain its enforcement against property other than that agreed upon. Montgomery v. Gibbs, 40 Iowa 652.

Staying Out Execution After Time for Appeal Has Elapsed. — Where a judgment is taken by default, fraud sufficient to entitle the defendant to enjoin the judgment is not shown by the fact that the defendant was not notified of the entry of the judgment, and that execution was not sued out thereunder until after the time in which the defendant might petition for a writ of review had elapsed. *Amherst College v. Withdrawing Defense Made. — Where the record shows that a defense was put in and then withdrawn in the suit at law, and judgment by confession was rendered, equity will not entertain a bill to enjoin such judgment and set up the same defense in equity, unless it was a defense which could be made only in equity. Ragsdale v. Gossett, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 730.

shall be void. Where statutes of this character prevail it is undoubtedly the rule that equity will grant relief against a judgment founded upon a gaming consideration, although no defense was made at law,¹ and it is altogether immaterial that the judgment was recovered by a bona fide assignee, for value, without notice.² In all other jurisdictions where there is no statutory declaration that judgments founded on gaming contracts shall be void, the party is bound to make his defense at law, and having failed to do so cannot come into equity to enjoin the judgment on the ground of illegality of consideration.³

14. Judgments Based on Usurious Contracts. — Courts of law and equity have concurrent jurisdiction of the subject of usury, and the court which first has jurisdiction of the subject must finally conclude it by its judgment or decree.⁴ The general rule is well settled that where the defendant at law failed to make his defense of usury and was not prevented by fraud or the fault of the other party, nor by accident, unmixed with negligence on his part, a court of chancery will not take jurisdiction to afford relief.⁵ A few decisions, however, have recognized certain qualifications to the general rule, which may be stated as follows: Where there is some embarrassment and difficulty in the remedy at law in consequence of the number of usurious securities and number of contracts, and the complex nature of the transactions, or where the suits at law and the judgments are to be regarded as usurious securities constituting a part of the devices resorted to to conceal and secure the usury, in all such cases chancery may give relief by injunction.⁶ So in another decision it was

These Decisions Rest Expressly on the Fact that the Judgment Is Declared Void by the Statute, and in one of them it was said: "No relief can be had against a void contract when the defense ought to have been made at law; but if the judgment itself be void it is a different question. Hence, on gaming contracts chancery will give relief, because the judgment is void, although the defense might have been made at law." Humphries v. Bartee, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 295.

Furthermore, These Statutes Are Strictly Construed. — If the statute declares void judgments for money won at cards or other games, a party who fails to make defense at law against an action for money won on an election bet will have no right to equitable relief against the judgment. Lucas v. Nichols, 66 Ill. 41.

2. Recovery of Judgment by Bona Fide Assignee. — Gough v. Pratt, 9 Md. 526; Lucas v. Waul, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 157; Woodson v. Barrett, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612.

3. Party Must Make Defense Where Judgment Not Void. — Owens v. Van Winkle Gin, etc., Co., 96 Ga. 408; Jones v. Jones, Term (4 N. Car.) 110; Smith v. Kammerer, 152 Pa. St. 98; Giddens v. Lea, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 133. As sustaining this proposition see also Young v. Beardsley, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 93. See generally the title GAMBLING CONTRACTS, vol. 14, p. 576.

In one of these cases the court recognizes the correctness of the decisions already mentioned in jurisdictions where the statute declares judgments on gaming contracts void, and holds that in the absence of such a statute the general rule that the party must make his defense at law unless prevented by fraud, accident, or mistake, applies. Owens v. Van Winkle Gin, etc., Co., 96 Ga. 408.

And in another the court, in support of the conclusions reached, invokes the doctrine that he who seeks the aid of a court of equity must come into equity with clean hands. Smith v. Kammerer, 152 Pa. St. 98.

6. Qualifications of Rule — Embarrassment and Difficulty in Legal Remedy. — Frierson v. Moody, held that injunctive relief may be had against a usurious judgment entered upon a warrant of attorney to confess judgment.¹ In any event, however, the defense of usury is a personal privilege, and advantage of it cannot be taken by any one other than the debtor himself; and where the debtor fails to defend at law on the ground of usury, no one else is, under any circumstances, entitled to enjoin the judgment because of usury in the contract upon which it is founded.² And in any case, to entitle a party to enjoin an usurious judgment the bill must show a tender of the amount equitably due.³

15. Judgments Affecting Title to Real Estate. — A bill to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment by sale of the judgment debtor's real property will not be sustained on the ground of errors or irregularities in the proceedings leading up to the judgment;⁴ but it has been held that a sale of lands under execution issued on a judgment which is fraudulent will be enjoined at the instance of the purchaser at a former sale under a number of executions, one of which was issued on the same fraudulent judgment. The fraud gives to the purchaser a claim to equitable relief for the removal of the cloud on his title.⁵ So it has been held that a judgment on a bond given for the purchase money for land will be perpetually enjoined where there is a complete failure of title,⁶ and if there is a partial failure of title the judgment will be enjoined and the vendor compelled to make allowance to the purchaser for the value of such part of the land as he may fail to give possession of at the time agreed on.⁷ A sale of land belonging to a person other than the judgment debtor will be enjoined, as such sale will create a cloud upon the title.⁸

16. Satisfied Judgments — View that Satisfied Judgment May Be Enjoined. — There is some difference of opinion as to whether a court of chancery has power to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment which has been satisfied. According to some decisions an application for injunction under this state of facts should be granted,⁹ and that, too, notwithstanding the fact that the court in which the judgment was rendered might have the power to grant the same relief upon motion to stay the execution.¹⁰ Of course what has been said must be taken with the qualification that the payment must be made to some one having authority to receive the money.¹¹

Where Amount Due Has Been Tendered. — An injunction lies to prevent proceedings on a satisfied judgment, or where the amount due has been tendered and refused by the judgment plaintiff. Bowen v. Clark, 46 Ind. 405.

Part Payment of Judgment. — Good ground to enjoin the collection of a judgment is shown by the facts that the plaintiff had paid to the defendant a certain amount thereof for which no credit had been given, and that a levy and sale of his property would be made to pay this sum unless prevented. Hunter v. Bertram, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 593.

View that Satisfied Judgment Cannot Be Enjoined. — Some decisions, however, take a view in direct opposition to that just stated, and hold that equity has no jurisdiction to relieve against a judgment which has been satisfied.¹

17. Judgments in Criminal Cases. — From its nature and organization, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to stay or prevent the execution of a judgment in a criminal case.²

18. Judgments of Other States. — There is some difficulty in determining the exact limit of power exercisable by courts of equity in granting relief against judgments obtained in another state. It has been held that where a judgment on which a domestic judgment is based has been reversed by the court of the state in which it was rendered, a bill may be maintained in the domestic courts to enjoin the domestic judgment, if the party seeking relief has been guilty of no laches.³ If a judgment has been merely set aside by the reviewing court, leaving, so far as appears, the suit in which it was rendered still pending, the injunction against the domestic judgment based thereon will merely stay the proceedings on the domestic judgment until the determination of the original suit.⁴

Actions on Foreign Judgments. — An action on a foreign judgment will not be enjoined for causes which might have been urged as a defense in the original action, unless the party has been prevented from setting up his defense by accident, mistake, surprise, or fraud of the opposite party.⁵ If, however, the party has been prevented from making his defense in the original action by the fraud of his adversary, the domestic courts will enjoin action on the judgment,⁶ and the same is the case where the adverse party has by accident or mistake obtained an unfair advantage in the original action.⁷

Enjoining Judgments Based on Foreign Judgments. — Where judgment on a foreign judgment is recovered in the domestic courts, the power of a domestic court of equity to enjoin such judgment has been frequently recognized.⁸ It has been said that a domestic judgment based on a foreign judgment will, in general, be enjoined for any cause sufficient to authorize a court of equity to enjoin a judgment originally rendered by the domestic courts.⁹ A domestic judgment will not be enjoined for causes which might have been set up as a defense in the original action¹⁰ or for causes which might have been set up as where it was held no ground to enjoin the judgment that the debtor paid it to a constable who had entered it satisfied, the constable having no authority to receive the money or make such entry.

a defense to the action on the judgment in the domestic forum,¹ unless some reason founded in fraud, accident, or surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the defendant, be shown in explanation of the failure to make such defenses.²

19. Judgments or Decrees of Courts of Concurrent Jurisdiction. — No court has the power to interfere by injunction with the judgments or decrees of a court of concurrent or co-ordinate jurisdiction having equal power to grant the relief sought by injunction.³ The fact that the parties to the injunction proceeding are not the same as the parties to the judgment or decree which it is sought to enjoin does not relieve the case from the operation of the rule, nor can the consent of the parties change the rule or relax its binding force in any particular case;⁴ it is not established and enforced so much to protect the rights of parties as to protect the rights of courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction to avoid conflict of jurisdiction, confusion, and delay in the administration of justice.⁵ Nor does the fact that the judge of the court where the judgment which it is sought to enjoin was rendered is disqualified from sitting in the case constitute any exception to the rule.⁶ It has been said that the only case in which interference with the judgments or decrees of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction will be allowed is where the court in which the action or proceeding is pending is unable by reason of its jurisdiction to afford the relief sought.⁷ Proceedings for relief should always be had in the court rendering the judgment or decree.⁸

20. Enjoining Judgment by Agreement. — While a cause of action, when prosecuted to judgment, becomes merged in the judgment, and such judgment is a bar to a second prosecution of the same cause of action, yet it is competent for the parties to agree that such judgment may be set aside and enjoined, upon condition that it shall not affect the right of the plaintiff therein to prosecute a suit on his original cause of action which formed the basis of the judgment.⁹

21. Injunctive Relief Against Awards. — Where a judgment has been duly entered on an award of arbitrators, equity will not usually grant relief by enjoining the judgment on any ground which might have been set up as a Rule under Kentucky Code. — By virtue of express statutory provision in Kentucky (Bullitt's Civ. Code Ky. 1895, § 285), the court in which a judgment was rendered alone has jurisdiction to enjoin it. McConnell v. Raive, (Ky. 1886) 1 S. W. Rep. 582; *Davis v. defense, unless the party, without any neglect on his part, was prevented by accident, mistake, or by fraud perpetrated by his opponent.¹ Thus it cannot be urged as a ground for enjoining a judgment entered upon an award that the matters passed upon by the arbitrators were not within the submission, and that legal and sufficient notice of the proceedings was not given,² or that there was never a submission of the controversy to the parties assuming to act as arbitrators,³ or that the party seeking injunctive relief was mistaken as to the extent of the inquiry made by the arbitrators, it not being shown that such mistake was superinduced by the fraud of the other party;⁴ neither will equity relieve against an award on the ground that it is void, if its invalidity appears on the face of the papers.⁵ There is some conflict of authority as to whether fraud or corruption on the part of the arbitrators can be urged as a ground for equitable relief. According to a number of decisions the party who has had an opportunity to interpose the defense of fraud and corruption on the part of the arbitrators in an action on the award cannot have an injunction in an action by him to restrain the proceedings under this suit, either before or after judgment.⁶ Other decisions hold, however, that partiality, misconduct, fraud, and mistake of the arbitrators are grounds of defense exclusively of equitable cognizance.⁷

22. Injunction to Obtain Benefit of Set-off — Where Defense Made at Law. — Where a party applies in the first instance to a court of law to allow a set-off, and that court, after full consideration of all the circumstances of the case, refuses to allow it, a court of equity will refuse to sustain a bill filed for an injunction and a set-off. A decision of a court of competent jurisdiction, being res judicata, is conclusive and binding on other courts of concurrent jurisdiction.⁸

Where Defense Not Made at Law — Statement of Rule. — It may also be stated as a general rule that injunction against the enforcement of a judgment at law will not be granted to allow the defendant to set up payments or set-offs which he might have pleaded in an action at law.⁹ A defendant having a cross-demand available as a set-off either at law or in equity, and failing to bring it forward

But see Hughes v. M'Coun, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 254, where it was said that payments and set-offs against a judgment at law are subject to equity jurisdiction, and where the defense was not made at law, equity will relieve. In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Field, 86 Ill. 270, it was said that the rule that an injunction will not be granted against enforcing a judgment where defense might have been made in the action at law, does not apply to the defense of set-off, but only to such defenses as are required to be made to the suit in which the judgment is rendered.

Election of Remedies. — A party sued at law has his election to set off his claim or resort to his separate action, and if he deliberately elects the latter he cannot come into a court of equity and ask to be allowed to make a different determination, and to be restored to the right which he has once voluntarily waived. Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How. (U. S.) 445.

in an action at law, cannot make it the basis of equitable relief against the judgment at law without showing some sufficient excuse for his failure to avail himself of it at the trial of the action;¹ and if a discovery was necessary to prove the set-off he should have, filed his plea of discovery in aid of his defense.²

Unliquidated Demands Arising Out of Same or Different Transactions. — The rule stated is especially applicable in the case of unliquidated demands,³ and it is immaterial whether the demand arises out of the same⁴ or different transactions.⁵

Erroneous Advice as Affecting Right. — So the rule is applicable although the party seeking equitable relief had been advised that the law court had no jurisdiction to allow his set-off⁶ or that it was not necessary to bring his claim before the court in which the judgment was rendered.⁷

Exceptions to Rule — Fraud, Accident, or Mistake. — As is the case with other defenses, if a party is prevented from seeking to obtain his set-off in an action at law by the fraud of his adversary, equity may relieve against the judgment on that ground;⁸ and it would seem that unavoidable accident preventing the party from interposing his set-off as a defense at law will constitute a sufficient ground for equitable relief.⁹

Claims Which Cannot Be Satisfied by Ordinary Suit. — It has likewise been held that a court of equity, upon bill filed, will compel an equitable set-off when the parties have mutual demands against each other which are so situated that it is impossible for the party claiming a set-off to obtain satisfaction for his claim by an ordinary suit at law or in equity.¹⁰

Insolvency of Judgment Creditor. — According to some decisions the mere insolvency of the judgment creditor will not of itself justify an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment at law in order to let in a set-off which might have been pleaded at law at the time when such judgment was recovered.¹¹ The rule laid down by the weight of authority, however, is to the effect that the insolvency of the party seeking to enforce a judgment furnishes a suffi-

Illustration. — Thus where a payment was made after the commencement of suit, in confidence that it would be credited, and particularly where there was an agreement to that effect, and the credit was not given, but judgment was taken, in the absence of the defendant, for the whole amount, it was held that the party thus wronged might have his remedy by injunction. Dickenson v. McDermott, 13 Tex. 248.

9. Unavoidable Accident Ground for Relief. — Cummins v. Bentley, 5 Ark. 9. But compare Hudson v. Kline, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 379, in which case it was held that where a person has a plain remedy at law or in equity for recovery of his claims against a judgment creditor he cannot enjoin the judgment until the claims can be established, in order that they may be set off against the judgment merely on the ground that he was prevented by accident from pleading the claims as set-offs at law.

10. Inadequate Remedy by Ordinary Suit. — Russell v. Conway, 11 Cal. 93.

11. View that Insolvency of Judgment Creditor Insufficient. — Rives v. Rives, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 353; Zinn v. Dawson, (W. Va. 1899) 34 S. E. Rep. 784; Sartyre v. Harpold, 33 W. Va. 553; Faulconer v. Stinson, 44 W. Va. 546.

Insolvency Combined with Negligent Mistake.

— Where a party has been summoned to answer an action at law for the recovery of money, and allows judgment by default to go against him, although at the time of such recovery he had judgments against the plaintiff which he might have pleaded as a set-off, he cannot, on the ground that he mistook the time at which the case was to be tried, combined with the fact of the insolvency of the plaintiff, come into equity to obtain the benefit of such set-off. Zinn v. Dawson, (W. Va. 1899) 34 S. E. Rep. 784.

cient ground for the interposition of a court of equity to enable the debtor to avail himself of a set-off.¹ Even though insolvency should not of itself be considered a sufficient ground on which to base equitable relief, it is always an important factor and may with other grounds of equitable relief justify the interposition of the court of equity by the process of injunction.²

Failure to Name Sum Claimed as Due. — Where a party seeking to enjoin a judgment to let in a set-off fails to name the sum claimed to be due as a set-off an injunction should not be granted.³

Where Whole Judgment Not Enjoined. — If a case for equitable relief is presented, but the amount due on the set-off is less than the amount of the judgment, the court should not enjoin the whole execution.⁴

Injunction Not Release of Errors. — An injunction against a judgment at law because certain claims are valid set-offs does not operate as a release of errors by the defendant at law, where no order was made that the injunction should be allowed only on condition of a release of errors.⁵

X. EXECUTIONS — 1. Right to Levy and Sell in General. — Ordinarily a judgment creditor has a right to levy his execution upon any property of the judgment debtor which is subject to levy and sale, and equity will not interfere with this right.⁶

2. Relief in General — Adequacy of Legal Remedy — By Motion or by Action. — There must be some special element of equitable jurisdiction to justify an interference — some impending mischief otherwise irremediable, some want or peculiar obstruction of legal redress; and it may be laid down as a general rule, not always uniformly applied, however, that a court of equity will not interpose to restrain proceedings under an execution where there is an adequate remedy at law, as by motion to quash or to stay, or affidavit of illegality, in the court having control of the process⁷ (for such courts usually have full and ample supervisory power over their own process and can correct or pre-

Rights of Assignee of Judgment. — An injunction lies to restrain the execution by the assignee of a judgment so as to allow the judgment debtor to enforce an equitable set-off against the judgment creditor. Marshall v. Cooper, 43 Md. 46.

Setting Off Judgment Against Judgment. — Equity will enjoin the collection of a judgment in favor of an insolvent plaintiff who is a judgment debtor to the defendant, to the extent of such indebtedness. Beard v. Beard, 25 W. Va. 486, 52 Am. Rep. 219.

Debt in Excess of Judgment. — In Payne v. Loudon, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 518, it was held that where a judgment creditor was insolvent and owed to the judgment debtor a sum largely in excess of the judgment a good cause for an injunction was presented.

Purchase of Set-off After Suit Brought. — Where a set-off has been purchased by the defendant after suit brought at law, it cannot be made available at law, and if the plaintiff at law is insolvent the defendant is entitled to come into equity to have the set-off allowed. *Fields v. vent any abuse of it¹), or where the party has an adequate remedy by an action at law to recover possession or an action of trespass for the damages he has sustained.² Thus it is held that the holder of a prior lien, or an incumbrancer,³ or trustees, or cestuis que trustent, will not be heard to restrain a sale of the property under an execution upon the ground that the prior lien or trust is superior to the lien of the judgment or execution, because under the general rule there is an adequate remedy at law;⁴ and the same rule is applied to an attempt on the part of attachment creditors to restrain proceedings under executions alleged to be injurious to the superior interests of the attachment creditors.⁵

Injunction Incidental to Original Jurisdiction.—On the other hand, however, it seems that the character of the matters involved is often deemed such as to justify the exercise of equitable jurisdiction,⁶ and in such cases executions have been enjoined incidentally to the relief to be awarded, as where the jurisdiction is exercised to prevent a multiplicity of suits and by one decree to quiet title to a number of lots,¹ or in cases involving the guardianship of trusts or the administration of trust estates,² or to protect the superior equities of an innocent purchaser as against the enforcement of a secret lien.³

Estoppel. — So where judgment creditors assent to a deed of trust made by their debtors and by their conduct induce third parties to purchase land bound by the judgments and to believe that the creditors will look to the trustees and not to the land for payment, execution of the judgment will be restrained.⁴

3. When Remedy at Law Inadequate. — It is equally well established, however, that where the remedy of one complaining of an execution or the proceedings thereunder is not adequate at law, equity will interfere in his behalf, and he may invoke the aid of its injunctive process.⁵ Thus, an injunction will be issued where the officer is acting beyond his territorial jurisdiction⁶ or where the plaintiff in the execution is a nonresident and notice of a motion to quash must be served by publication, and for that reason cannot be given in time to avoid the danger apprehended.⁷ So where the sheriff rejects an affidavit of illegality, in a case in which such affidavit is the proper remedy against an execution, an injunction will lie.⁸

4. Irregularities in Process or Proceedings Thereunder — a. RULE STATED. — Where there is not some special element of equitable jurisdiction, some want or peculiar obstruction of legal redress, courts of chancery will not correct even the grossest errors or irregularities in the form of an execution or the proceedings thereunder, but the party will be left to the ordinary remedies in the court having control of the process.⁹

Separate Property of Wife. — In Bridges v. McKenna, 14 Md. 268, the decision rested upon the established jurisdiction of the court of chancery over the separate property of femes covert, the court holding that a feme covert holding property to her sole and separate use was entitled to relief in equity to an execution thereon by a creditor of her husband. After Tender of Property under Judgment in Replevin. — The defendant in an action of replevin tendered to the plaintiff the property involved and for the value of which judgment had been awarded, and it was refused. It was held that equity would enjoin the collection of the value of the property under an execution. McClellan v. Marshall, 19 Iowa 561, 87 Am. Dec. 454.

9. Mere Irregularities — Alabama. — Triest v. Enslen, 106 Ala. 188.

b. APPLICATION OF RULE — (1) Irregularity in Writ or Issuance Thereof. — Applying this rule the court has refused to interfere by injunction where the writ issued without a seal,¹ where there was a misdescription in the execution and the writ did not follow the judgment,² where the execution was for an amount in excess of the judgment,³ where the execution issued improvidently, as without judgment,⁴ and where the execution issued prematurely, as where a judgment was confessed under an agreement between the parties that execution should be stayed for a certain period and the execution was sued out in violation of the agreement.⁵

Execution Issued on Dormant Judgment. — Equity will not, as a rule, interfere by injunction where an execution issues on a dormant judgment.⁶ In some cases, however, an injunction to restrain an execution issued upon a dormant judgment has been allowed.⁷

Offer to Do Equity. — In Eaton v. Markley, 126 Ind. 125, it was held that under the rule that a suitor who seeks equitable relief must show that he offers to do equity, an execution on a judgment which draws interest will not be enjoined on the ground that it is for a greater amount than the judgment unless the complainant first offers to pay all that is due on the execution.

Injunction as to Part Not Due. — In Louisiana it was held that an execution for a greater amount of interest than that allowed by the judgment would not be enjoined as to the whole judgment, but only as to the amount of the excess. Barrow v. Robichaux, 14 La. Ann. 203.

4. Execution Without Judgment. — Davidson v. Floyd, 15 Fla. 669; Lasselle v. Moore, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 226. But see Alsup v. Allen, 43 Tex. 593.

Record Destroyed. — But equity has enjoined an execution where the record of judgment had been destroyed. Cyrus v. Hicks, 20 Tex. 483.

Discharge of Levy After Reversal of Judgment. — Where after the issuance and levy of an execution the judgment upon which it issued is reversed, the levy may be discharged on motion, and therefore there is no reason for the interference of a court of chancery by an injunction. Fahs v. Roberts, 54 Ill. 192.

5. Premature Issuance — Violation of Agreement. — Fowler v. Williams, 20 Ark. 641; Moulton v. Knapp, 85 Cal. 385.

Where Judgment Is Unpaid After Expiration of Stay Period. — Where, by an agreement the judgment was to be paid within a specified time, and execution issued in violation of such agreement, but the judgment had not been paid after the expiration of the time agreed upon, it was held that an injunction against the execution would not be granted without an offer of performance on the part of the plaintiff. He who asks equity must first do equity. Anamosa v. Wurzbacher, 37 Iowa 25.

Where Another Execution May Issue Immediately an injunction will not be granted against an execution prematurely issued. Dayton v. Commercial Bank, 6 Rob. (La.) 17. See also Hudson v. Dangerfield, 2 La. 63, 20 Am. Dec. 297.

6. Execution on Dormant Judgment — Injunction Not Proper. — Hanson v. Johnson, 20 Minn. 194; Coward v. Chastain, 99 N. Car. 443, 6 Am. St. Rep. 533; Foard v. Alexander, 64 N. Car. 70. See also Pursel v. Deal, 16 Oregon 295.

7. Execution on Dormant Judgment Enjoined. — Krinke v. Parish, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. 141, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 30, 2 Ohio Dec. 85, wherein it was said that while a motion to recall an execution may be made, yet in Ohio an injunction has been maintained under the claim that an execution has been erroneously issued [citing Miller v. Longacre, 26 Ohio St. 291, in which case it appears that the execution had been sent to another county, and upon a suit brought to enjoin its enforcement the execution creditor appeared and answered without objection to the jurisdiction or mode of procedure]; North v. Swing, 24 Tex. 193; Gabel v. McMahan, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 716; Jordan v. Corley, 42 Tex. 284; Seymour v. Hill, 67 Tex. 385, upon the theory of presumption of payment, but it is held that when this presumption is rebutted to perpetuate the injunction would be to refuse to apply the well-settled principle or rule in equity that when no legal injury to the applicant can result from this denial an injunction cannot be granted.

Dormant Judgment in Hands of Innocent Assignee. — In Predohl v. O'Sullivan, (Neb. 1899)

(2) Irregularity in Proceedings under Writ — (a) In General. — Irregularities in the proceedings under an execution are cognizable in the court issuing the writ, and a court of equity will not ordinarily interfere upon such ground.¹

Excessive Levy — Appraisement. — An excessive levy is not a ground for equitable interference by injunction where the statute provides a remedy by appraisement and a reduction of the seizure in proper cases, the latter remedy being adequate and exclusive of the resort to equitable interference.²

(b) Levy upon Exempt Property. — A bill in equity will not be allowed to restrain the sale of chattels under an execution upon the ground that the property is exempt, because adequate relief may be had by superseding the execution, or by an action for the conversion of the property, or for the possession thereof, or after sale by having the sale set aside, or by suing for possession of the property or damages for its conversion.³

Exemptions in Land — Homestead. — When an execution is levied upon exempt land, but the exemption depends upon extrinsic facts, wherefore the judgment would stand as an apparent lien upon the land and a sale would cast a cloud upon the title, the party is entitled to relief in equity by an injunction restraining a sale under the execution.⁴ This question is most often involved in cases of homestead exemptions, and a homestead right is thus protected.⁵

5. Seizure of Property of Stranger to Writ — a. IN GENERAL. — As a general rule, a bill in equity will not lie for a specific delivery of chattels or to prevent their sale under an execution, because by an action at law full compensation in damages may be obtained or the recovery of the possession of the property may be had. For these purposes, then, the remedy at law being adequate as a general rule, when property of one person is seized under an execution

80 N. W. Rep. 903, it was held that after a judgment has become dormant in the hands of an assignee or one who has become subrogated to the rights of the original judgment creditor, execution will be enjoined at the instance of an innocent purchaser of the land claiming through the judgment debtor.

Failure to Exhaust Property of Principal. — Kilpatrick v. Tunstall, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 80.

Irregularity in Sale — Injunction Pending Action to Annul. — Where the execution debtor fails to embrace an opportunity to object to the manner of the sale of the property seized under the execution, an injunction will not lie to restrain a purchaser from the enjoyment of the property pending an action by the execution debtor to annul the sale. City Bank v. McIntyre, 8 Rob. (La.) 467.

Collins*, 64 Tex. 314; Winnie v. Grayson, 3 Tex. 429]. In Spencer v. Rosenthal, 58 Tex. 5, it was held that while it was a settled rule that the mere levy upon lands belonging to one person under an execution against another would not entitle the former to an injunction, there was a recognized exception in a case where the wife applied for an injunction to restrain the sale of the homestead upon an execution against the husband. Citing Baxter v. Dear, 24 Tex. 17, 76 Am. Dec. 89.

against another the former cannot resort to the injunctive process of a court of equity to restrain the sale or proceedings under the execution.¹

Levy upon Individual Property — Judgment Against Firm. — On the principle that the court out of which the process issues is perfectly able to prevent an abuse of its own process, equity will not enjoin a threatened levy upon the property of an individual member of a partnership on a judgment against the firm.²

Levy upon Partnership Property for Individual Debt. — On the other hand, it is held that equity will interfere by injunction to restrain the sale of the interest of one as a member of a copartnership in the copartnership property, under a judgment against such individual and an execution levied upon such property, until his interest can be ascertained.³

b. REMEDY BY TRIAL OF RIGHT OF PROPERTY. — A wrongful levy upon the property of a stranger is not a ground for interference by injunction, as the person wronged has an adequate remedy under statutes providing for the trial of the right of property.⁴

c. WHERE OWNER CAN DEFEND HIS TITLE. — In like manner equity will not interfere where the owner of property can defend his title in an action for the recovery of property based upon proceedings under such execution.⁵

d. WHEN REMEDY AT LAW IS INADEQUATE — (1) In General. — But a court of equity will not withhold relief from a party in such a situation that a sale of his property under an execution would subject him to irremediable loss, notwithstanding he may in some sort have a remedy at law, such remedy,

3. Levy upon Partnership Property for Individual Debt. — Place v. Sweetzer, 16 Ohio 142 [approved in Sutcliffe v. Dohrman, 18 Ohio 181, 51 Am. Dec. 450], holding that the sale may be restrained until the interest of the partner is ascertained; Turner v. Smith, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 304, holding that an injunction would be granted where the complaint showed that the copartner whose interest had been seized had in fact no interest in the assets; Cropper v. Coburn, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 465, holding that an injunction would be granted where it was admitted that the partner whose interest was supposed to have been seized had no interest which could pass by sale.

Contra. — Mowbray v. Lawrence. (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 107; Moody v. Payne, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 548, holding that the interest of a partner is subject to an execution on a judgment for an individual debt and equity will not stop execution and sale of such interests by injunction until the partnership accounts are taken and liquidated.

4. Trial of Right of Property. — Where a statute provides for an action of claim and delivery such remedy is considered to be plain, speedy, and adequate; and when no reason is given why one cannot obtain the relief to which he is entitled in such action, a sale under the execution cannot be enjoined. Richards v. Kirkpatrick, 53 Cal. 433; Ferguson v. Herring, 49 Tex. 129.

5. See infra, this section, To Prevent Cloud upon Title, however, being altogether inadequate under the equitable circumstances of the particular case.¹

Loss of Trade and Business Prospects. — Where goods of a stranger are seized and are not sold, damages at law are not recoverable beyond the injury done to them, or, if they are sold, beyond their value when taken; and it is held that under such circumstances the owner is entitled to an injunction to prevent the destruction of his credit, loss of his trade, and the failure of his business prospects.²

Ordinary Legal Remedies Not Available. — And where the owner is in such a position that the ordinary remedies available to a party to the action are not available to him, equity will afford him relief.³

Where Stranger Cannot Make Affidavit of Illegality. — Where the owner of property levied upon under an execution which is good and regular upon its face cannot make an affidavit of illegality by reason of not being a party to the execution, he may have an injunction.⁴

Protection to Stranger Pending Appeal by Garnishee. — In Georgia a temporary injunction was held to have been properly granted at the instance of one claiming property in the hands of a garnishee when the latter had appealed from a judgment sustaining a traverse to his denial of property in his hands belonging to the judgment debtor, but had given no supersedeas bond, the applicant executing good security and the judgment creditor being insolvent.⁵

(2) Property of Peculiar Value to Owner. — A court of equity will interfere to prevent the sale of property which is of such a character that the owner cannot be fully compensated by the verdict of the jury — property which may be fairly supposed to have a peculiar and additional value in the estimation of the owner, which could not enter into the consideration of a jury in assessing the damage for its conversion.⁶

Application of Principle to Slave. — This principle was applied to the seizure and sale of a slave not the property of the execution debtor,⁷ the nature of the Irremediable Loss Not Made to Appear. — But where the complainant claims goods in a store upon which an execution has been levied under a judgment against a third party under whom the plaintiff asserts title without showing that the property is of such a character or possessed of such peculiar value or interest to the owner that he could not be adequately compensated by damages at law, an injunction cannot be granted. Lewis v. Levy, 16 Md. 85; Freeland v. Reynolds, 16 Md. 416. See also Frazier v. White, 49 Md. 1.

3. Ordinary Remedies Not Available. — Ford v. Rigby, 10 Cal. 449, an injunction at the instance of the purchaser from the lessor of leased property, the former not being in nor entitled to possession, to restrain a sale under an execution against his vendor; Orr v. Pickett, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 269; Martin v. Jewell, 37 Md. 530; Wood v. Stanberry, 21 Ohio St. 142.

Trial of Right of Property Inadequate for Trustee. — In Sumner v. Crawford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. Rep. 825, it was held that a trustee might have an injunction to restrain the sale of goods under an execution against another, because the right of trial of property would not have been an adequate and complete remedy for the reason that in such a proceeding the trustee would have waived all damages that were incurred by reason of the alleged seizure.

Sheriff and Plaintiff in Execution Insolvent. — A court of equity may interfere by injunction where personal property not belonging to the judgment debtor is levied upon and the sheriff and the plaintiff in the execution are both insolvent. Bristol v. Hallyburton, 93 N. Car. 384.

property itself being considered sufficient by some of the decisions to justify the interference of a court of chancery,¹ while in other cases it has been considered that the peculiar circumstances must be shown, as that the slaves were family servants.²

c. CLAIMANT UNDER EXECUTION DEBTOR MUST SHOW GOOD TITLE. — Where the party seeking the injunction claims title under the judgment debtor, acquired recently, before the rendition of the judgment, he must make out a clear and undisputed title of purchase for a bona fide consideration.³

6. To Prevent Cloud upon Title — a. POWER IN GENERAL. — There is no doubt that it is within the province of a court of chancery, upon a proper case made, to interpose by way of accomplishing precautionary justice;⁴ and if a court of chancery would have jurisdiction to set aside a sheriff's deed given on a sale and to order that it be delivered up and canceled as casting a cloud upon the complainant's title, it follows as a necessary consequence that the court may interpose its aid to prevent such a cloud from being cast upon the title when the defendant evinces a fixed determination to proceed with the sale.⁵

b. CIRCUMSTANCES JUSTIFYING INTERFERENCE — (1) Broad General Rule as to Void Sale. — So far as the statement of a general rule is concerned, it seems that the controlling question is, would the sale be void so that no recovery or defense could be successfully based on the title acquired under the execution sale? If so, then the legal remedy is considered adequate, and equity will not interfere to prevent the sale.⁶ And in many cases it seems that under no circumstances, except where the complainant's title could not prevail over that of the purchaser at the execution sale without supporting evidence, as in the cases hereinafter instanced where the judgment stands as a prima facie valid lien,⁷ will a court of equity interfere, and the allegation in a bill that the complainant has the legal title and that the land is not subject to sale under the judgment is sufficient to show a want of equity;⁸ and Where Purchaser Would Be Charged with Notice. — Where a judgment debtor's proceeding by action to have the judgment set aside, an injunction to restrain a sale under execution pending such action will not be granted, as the purchaser at such sale would be concluded by the result of the action to set aside the judgment. Hart v. Marshall, 4 Minn. 294.

8. No Equity Where Complainant Shows Title in Himself — Missouri. — Drake v. Jones, 27

the mere fact that the judgment debtor once had title to the land is not sufficient reason for restraining a sale under an execution against him at the instance of the owner claiming under a deed from him prior to the judgment.¹

(2) Conflict of Authority. — Conflict of authority is to be found in the decisions of the several states as to when a court of equity ought to interfere either by way of removing a cloud already existing or preventing the casting of a cloud on the title.²

Levy upon Land of Stranger to Writ. — Upon the principle of the general rule last stated, it is held that if the land of a stranger to a judgment is seized for the debt of the judgment debtor, since the owner could recover his property against the purchaser or could successfully defend his title in an action at law by the purchaser, the bare fact of the seizure under such circumstances is no cause for equitable relief to prevent the sale,³ unless without evidence to rebut it the deed which would be made under the execution sale would convey a prima facie good title to the purchaser under such sale.⁴

Prevention of Cloud though Sale Would Be Void. — But where the circumstances are considered such that a cloud would be cast by a sale under the execution, it is held that the fact that the judgment is not a lien and that a sale would not convey a title which could be made effective against the real owner is not material upon the question of equitable jurisdiction to prevent the cloud;⁵ or, in other words, in this view of the general rule first stated, that if a sale would

Mo. 428; Kuhn v. McNeil, 47 Mo. 389; Wilcox v. Walker, 94 Mo. 88; Good v. Merkowitz, 35 Mo. App. 658. But in this state it was held that while the court would not enjoin the sale of land upon a common execution, it had uniformly enjoined and would always enjoin the sale of lands for the payment of taxes although the assessment was illegal, upon the ground that thereby a cloud would be cast upon the title. McPike v. Pen, 51 Mo. 63; Lockwood v. St. Louis, 24 Mo. 20; Wells v. Weston, 22 Mo. 384. And it was further held in this state that the weight of authority and reason sustain the position that if the defect is such as to require legal acumen to discover it, whether it appears on the deed or proceedings or is to be proven aliunde, courts of equity will entertain jurisdiction to remove the cloud. Merchants Bank v. Evans, 51 Mo. 345, holding that the remarks of Napton, J., in Gamble v. St. Louis, 12 Mo. 617, were too broad if he intended to be understood as holding that in all cases where a defect appears on the face of proceedings a court of equity would not interfere, but would leave the parties to their remedies at law; Withaus v. Washington Sav. Bank, 18 Mo. App. 184.

New Jersey. — Swayze v. Hackettstown Nat. Bank, 44 N. J. Eq. 9; Emery v. Vansickel, 15 N. J. Eq. 144; Darves v. Taylor, 35 N. J. Eq. 40.

1. Even When Complainant Claims under Judgment Debtor. — The rule upon the subject assumes that, the title of the party complaining being shown as it appears of record, the cloud to be removed is apparently a good title against it though really defective by reason of something not appearing on the record. be void and would convey no title equity will not restrain it, that rule seems to be too broadly stated and should be limited to cases where the defects which would render the sale void appear without extraneous evidence.

Relief though Judgment Not a Lien. — Under the rule thus modified, where a judgment creditor is seeking to subject to execution land which had been previously conveyed by the judgment debtor the sale will be enjoined at the instance of the grantee of such debtor upon the ground that it would embarrass the plaintiff's title,¹ and a deed valid on its face, in the absence of anything on the face thereof or on the face of the proceedings leading to it to show its invalidity as against the real owner, is held to be sufficient to cast such a cloud as the court will restrain.² So, also, the same effect would be given to a threatened sale under a judgment which was once a lien, but the lien of which has become inoperative after the lapse of a statutory period as against a bona fide purchaser from the judgment debtor,³ or where the plaintiff seeking to restrain the sale acquired his title by purchase at a sale under a former execution.⁴

Homestead Exemption. — And where the judgment is not in fact a lien, though for aught appearing on the record it would be so, and evidence in pais is necessary to overcome this presumption, as in the case of a homestead exemption, the rule is applied for the protection of the purchaser from the judgment debtor.⁵

Apparent Lien — Complainant Having Equitable Title. — Where the claimant under a deed from the judgment debtor had, before the judgment was rendered, a complete equitable title which is not supplemented by a conveyance of the legal title until after judgment against his vendor, an injunction will lie to restrain the sale, because the sheriff's deed would prima facie carry a good title.⁶

Protection of Wife's Separate Estate. — Further, the rule is applied for the protection of the separate estate of a married woman from sale under an execution against her husband,⁷ in this case, however, not so much because the deed of the purchaser at the execution sale would prima facie convey a good title and thus force the owner to exhibit her deed, as for the reason that the owner would be under the necessity of proving the character of her estate by evidence outside of her deed.

protection would be afforded to the purchaser from the judgment debtor because the fact that the purchaser's equitable estate antedated the judgment would not appear in the published record of titles and would require proof in an action of ejectment. Rodriguez v. Buckley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. Rep. 1123; Goodell v. Blumer, 41 Wis. 436. See also Burt v. Cassety, 12 Ala. 734; Schroeder v. Gurney, 73 N. Y. 430.

7. Protection of Wife's Separate Estate. — Calhoun v. Cozens, 3 Ala. 498; Tibbetts v. Fore, 70 Cal. 242, wherein it appears that, under the statute in California, the presumption attending the possession of property by either husband or wife is that it belongs to the community and that exceptions to the rule must be proved; Alverson v. Jones, 10 Cal. 9, 70 Am. Dec. 689; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 167; Hunter's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 197; Mann v. Wallis, 75 Tex. 611.

Rule that Stranger to Writ May Enjoin Sale. — In still other cases the very broad rule is announced that the mere fact that a person whose property is seized under an execution is a stranger to the writ is sufficient to entitle him to relief in equity through its injunctive process to restrain the sale, upon the ground that such a sale would necessarily embarrass the true title.¹

Under the Code Provisions, too, which abolish the distinction between legal and equitable actions and vest both legal and equitable jurisdiction in one court, to be administered according to the facts presented, pre-existing rules as to the adequacy of the remedy at law in this connection are relaxed.²

(3) Doubt as to Title — Attack upon Good Faith. — It is held that where there are serious doubts in regard to the validity of the complainant's title, or where the title to the property is in dispute, an injunction should not be granted to restrain a sale under an execution, the proper remedy in such a case being by an action at law.³ And where a wife seeks to enjoin the sale of property levied upon under an execution against her husband, upon the ground that the property is her separate estate, equity will not interfere where her title is denied;⁴ and if the title of the complainant is resisted upon the ground that it was procured in fraud of the rights of the husband's creditor, the sale should not be enjoined, but the judgment creditor should be permitted to proceed to sell under his execution, the question of the bona fides being left to be tried in an action at law.⁵

XI. POWER OF FEDERAL COURTS TO ENJOIN PROCEEDINGS IN STATE COURTS —

1. Where State Court First Acquires Jurisdiction. — A Federal Statute Provides that "the writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a state except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy."⁶

In Construing This Statute it has been held in a great number of decisions, both state and federal, that the statute, apart from the exception therein mentioned, absolutely prohibits any interference by the United States courts with proceedings in the state courts, providing the latter courts first acquire jurisdiction.⁷

But Independently of Any Statutory Provisions it is a doctrine too long established to require citation of authorities that where a court has jurisdiction it has a right to decide every question which occurs in the cause, and whether its decision be correct or otherwise, its judgment, until reversed, is regarded as binding in every other court, and where the jurisdiction of a court and the right of a plaintiff to prosecute his suit in it have once attached, that right cannot be arrested or taken away by proceedings in any other court.¹ It will thus be seen that this statute is scarcely more than a legislative affirmation of an ancient and well-settled rule in equity.²

The Prohibition Contained in the Statute applies not only to injunctions aimed at the state court itself, but also to injunctions issued to all parties before the court, its officers or litigants therein.³ So the prohibition extends to all steps taken by the court or by its officers under its process, from the institution of the suit until the close of the final process of execution which may be issued therein.⁴

Illustrations. — It has accordingly been held that a federal court cannot enjoin service of process issued by a state court,⁵ or the prosecution of an action already begun in a state court,⁶ or the enforcement of judgments of a state court,⁷ or sales under execution against property on the judgment of a state court.⁸

Where Property of Third Person Sold. — There is some difference of opinion on the question whether this rule applies when the property sold is that of some person other than the judgment debtor. The earliest decision on this question holds that under these circumstances the statute has no application, and that Proceedings in Violation of Federal Constitution. — A federal court has no power to enjoin proceedings in a state court to enforce a state law, although it is in violation of the Federal Constitution. Slaughter House Case, 1 Woods (U. As was said in a recent decision: "This section, save the exception, is as old as the judicial system of the United States. Its prohibition is absolute and unqualified, except where the injunction is authorized by law in proceedings in bankruptcy. This exception serves to emphasize the prohibition as to all other cases." Hemsley v. Myers, 45 Fed. Rep. 289.

the federal court may issue an injunction.¹ All the other decisions, including a very recent one, hold the contrary, taking the view that such act on the part of the officer, though unauthorized, is none the less a "proceeding" within the meaning of the statute.²

Municipal Assessments — Levy and Sale of Property. — Or enjoin a town from levying upon and selling property for the purpose of collecting an assessment of benefits for the layout of a highway, which assessment the court, pursuant to the state statutes, has ordered to be collected in the manner pursued in the collection of the town taxes.⁷

Condemnation Proceedings. — Nor, pending a condemnation suit in a state court, enjoin the petitioner from entering upon the land which it is sought to condemn.⁸

Property Held under Process. — Nor in any manner interfere with property seized and held under mesne or final process of a state court.⁹

On the Other Hand, a foreclosure sale by a public officer under a chattel mortgage is not a "proceeding" in a state court, within the meaning of the statute,¹⁰ and it has been held that where the ordinary of a county is required by statute to examine the returns, count the votes, and declare the result of a local election, his action in this regard is not such a "proceeding" as will inhibit an injunction from the federal court.¹¹

2. Where Federal Court First Acquires Jurisdiction. — It is well settled, upon grounds that cannot be questioned, that the restriction of the statute in question is to be limited to actions begun in the state courts before proceedings commenced in the federal courts, and that it has no application where jurisdiction of the federal courts has first attached.¹² These decisions proceed upon the theory that the federal courts must have full control over the enforcement of their judgments and decrees as well as over the rendition of them.¹ If the rule were otherwise, after suit brought in the federal court, a party defendant could, by resorting to a suit in a state court, defeat in many ways the effective jurisdiction and action of the federal court after it had obtained full jurisdiction of person and subject-matter.² The statute under consideration must be construed in connection with another statute³ providing that the federal courts shall have power to issue all writs which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions.⁴

3. Where Suit Has Been Removed to Federal Court. — The statute also has no application where a cause originating in a state court has been lawfully removed to the federal court.⁵ When a case is legally removed to the federal court all jurisdiction in the state court is at an end. The cause itself being transferred, no cause any longer exists in the state court, which is then absolutely without authority over the person and subject-matter of litigation. An injunction in such case by the federal court restraining the parties before it from proceeding elsewhere is not an injunction within the meaning and intention of the statute staying proceedings in a state court, because after removal there is no proceeding left in the state court, and no jurisdiction to be interfered with.⁶ Furthermore, if after removal the plaintiff could continue or renew his litigation in the state court the whole purposes of the removal might be defeated.⁷ Nevertheless, to give the federal court jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings in a state court, every step requisite to the legal removal of the cause must be taken,⁸ and an injunction will not issue until the question of the right to remove the cause is finally decided.⁹

4. Under Bankruptcy Laws — a. UNDER ACT OF 1898 — (1) Where Time After Which Petition May Be Filed Has Not Elapsed. — The statute, as already shown, excepts from its operation cases where an injunction of proceedings in a state court by a federal court "may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy."¹⁰ The recently enacted bankruptcy law of 1898 contains a number of provisions which the courts have construed as authorizing courts of bankruptcy to enjoin proceedings in the state courts under certain circumstances. One of the provisions of the act is that it shall go into force upon its passage, but no petition for involuntary bankruptcy shall be filed within four months of its passage. In the first decision handed down after the passage of the act, the court, relying on sections 2, 23 (subdiv. c), and 67 (subdiv. f), the material parts of which are set out in the notes,¹¹ held that when the time within which a petition may be filed for involuntary bankruptcy (four months after the passage of the act) has not elapsed and the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy by suffering one creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings in state courts, the District Court, sitting in bankruptcy, may enjoin the sale of the property by such creditor under process in such proceeding until the time arrives when the petition in bankruptcy may be filed against him.¹

(2) Where Creditor Has Acquired Unlawful Liens Within Four Months of Bankruptcy Proceedings — Where Debtor Has Assigned for Benefit of Creditors. — Under section 3 of the act a general assignment for the benefit of creditors is an act of bankruptcy, and where, in accordance with the provisions of section 67, subdiv. f,² a petition for involuntary bankruptcy is filed within four months after such assignment, the bankruptcy court may, pending or after the adjudication, enjoin all proceedings commenced or being prosecuted in the state courts in pursuance of the assignment.³ This is true whether the assignment is made under state insolvency laws⁴ or in pursuance of a general statute regulating the administration of a trust created by a general assignment for the benefit of creditors.⁵ It has accordingly been held that pending the adjudication in bankruptcy an assignee who has taken possession of the estate and had it appraised, and who is proceeding to sell it, may be enjoined by the bankruptcy court from proceeding further with the administration of the estate, and a marshal may be appointed to take possession of the property of bankruptcy, and are hereby invested, within their respective territorial limits as now established, or as they may be hereafter changed, with such jurisdiction at law and in equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings, in vacation in chambers and during their respective terms, as they are now or may be hereafter held, to * * * (2) allow claims, disallow claims, reconsider allowed or disallowed claims, and allow or disallow them against bankrupt estates; (3) appoint receivers or the marshals, upon application of parties in interest, in case the courts shall find it absolutely necessary, for the preservation of estates, to take charge of the property of bankrupts after the filing of the petition and until it is dismissed or the trustee is qualified; * * * (7) cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto, except as herein otherwise provided; * * * (15) make such orders, issue such process, and enter such judgments in addition to those specifically provided for as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act."

court shall, on due notice, order that the right under such levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien shall be preserved for the benefit of the estate; and thereupon the same may pass to and shall be preserved by the trustee for the benefit of the estate as aforesaid."

Assignee under Insolvency Laws Takes No Title. — The assignee under the insoperative state insolvency law takes no title as against the creditors by the deed of assignment, and all of his acts touching the estate of the bankrupt, as well as all acts by the state court in the administration thereof, are unauthorized and void, and will be treated as nullities wherever drawn in question. In re Smith, 92 Fed. and hold it until the petition is dismissed or a trustee is appointed to take charge of the property.¹ So after the assignor has been adjudged a bankrupt the bankruptcy court may enjoin any disposition of the assets by the assignee,² or require him to hold them subject to the orders of the court of bankruptcy,³ or deliver them up to the trustee or receiver in bankruptcy.⁴

Where Unlawful Liens Are Procured by Attachment. — So where the petition for involuntary bankruptcy is based on the fact that attaching creditors have procured liens in contravention of section 67, subdiv. f, and in accordance with the provisions of that section a petition is filed within four months after the creation of such liens, it has been held that the bankruptcy court may, after the debtor has been declared a bankrupt, on a rule to show cause, enjoin the further prosecution of the attachment suits.⁵ This power, it was held, is not affected by the fact that the creditors' causes of action were such as would not be affected by a discharge in bankruptcy. Section 11, subdiv. a, providing that suits pending against a bankrupt may be stayed when "founded upon a claim from which a discharge would be a release," has no application to a petition in bankruptcy based on the provisions of section 67, subdiv. f.⁶ On the other hand, it has been held that the mere filing of the petition in bankruptcy against the debtor within four months of the time when the liens by attachment were created does not render the attaching creditors amenable to the control of the bankruptcy court, and that where they are not regularly made parties to the petition in bankruptcy, and served with process, the bankruptcy court cannot enjoin them from disposing of the property in their hands held adversely to the debtor and to the petitioning creditors.⁷

Where Unlawful Liens Are Otherwise Acquired. — Under the provisions of section 67, subdiv. f,⁸ if the petition in involuntary bankruptcy is filed within four months after action begun and writ issued and levy on property of the debtor, the court of bankruptcy may on summary petition order the sheriff holding the property under the levy to deliver it to the trustee;⁹ and that, too, notwith-

3. Requiring Assignee to Hold Assets Subject to Order of Bankruptcy Court. — Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel, 95 Fed. Rep. 638. Contra, dictum in In re Abraham, 93 Fed. Rep. 767, where it was said that the remedy of the trustee in bankruptcy for the recovery of the property assigned or its proceeds is not by summary petition in the court of bankruptcy, but by plenary action at law or in equity in the proper state or federal court.

4. Requiring Assignee to Deliver Assets to Trustee in Bankruptcy. — In re Smith, 92 Fed. Rep. 135.

5. Where Unlawful Liens Are Procured by Attachment. — Bear v. Chase, 99 Fed. Rep. 920. Compare Heath v. Shaffer, 93 Fed. Rep. 647, in which case it was held that where holders of chattel mortgages of the debtor's property had taken possession thereof and brought suit to foreclose before institution of bankruptcy proceedings, the court of bankruptcy would not enjoin the prosecution of the action, but would leave the trustee to appear and assert his rights in the state court. In this case the petition in bankruptcy was filed within four months after the suit was brought, and the bill for injunction was filed after the adjudication in bankruptcy. In support of the conclusions reached, the court relied mainly on Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 521, a decision under the Bankruptcy Act of 1867.

6. Power to Enjoin Not Affected by Section 11. — Bear v. Chase, 99 Fed. Rep. 920, in which it was said: "Under subdivision f, section 67, of the Bankrupt Act, all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens obtained through legal proceedings against an insolvent person within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy are annulled, and no exceptions from the sweeping provisions of the act are made as to the kind or character of claims sued on."

7. In re Ogles, 93 Fed. Rep. 426. In this case, judging from the language of the opinion, the court probably would have reached the same conclusion if when the proceedings to enjoin were instituted the debtor had been regularly adjudged a bankrupt.

8. For the full text of this provision see the note at the beginning of this subsection of this title.

9. Directing Sheriff to Deliver Property to Trustee. — In re Francis-Valentine Co., 93 Fed. Rep. 953, affirmed 94 Fed. Rep. 793. But compare In re Franks, 95 Fed. Rep. 635, which criticises the above decision and holds that where a petition is filed within four months standing the pendency of an action of replevin in a state court against the sheriff by a stranger claiming the ownership of the property.¹ So if property has been sold under execution, a stay may be granted by the bankruptcy court against the payment of the moneys made on the execution by the sheriff, and an order may be issued directing the sheriff to pay over the money to the trustee when appointed.² Furthermore, no sufficient reason why the sheriff should not obey the order of the court is constituted by the fact that after such order is made the judgment creditor files a bill in equity in the United States Circuit Court to enjoin the sheriff from paying the money to the trustee and to require him to pay it to the complainant. A bill of this character is merely an unauthorized attempt to oust the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, and is without merit.³ So in another decision proceedings in the state court were enjoined where a receiver had been appointed in a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of property, the fraudulent grantee having, however, voluntarily restored the title to the grantor against whom the petition in bankruptcy had been filed.⁴

(3) Where Claims Are Such as a Discharge in Bankruptcy Would Release. — Section 11 of the Bankruptcy Act provides that "a suit which is founded upon a claim from which a discharge would be a release, and which is pending against a person at the time of the filing of the petition against him, shall be stayed until after an adjudication or the dismissal of the petition." According to one decision the application for the stay mentioned must be made to the state court, and not to the court of bankruptcy.⁵ Another decision, however, holds that the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to order such stay;⁶ and in another it was held that under section 11 and section 2, clause 15,⁷ the bankrupt court could stay proceedings in a state court though begun after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy.⁸ If the claim in suit is not such as a discharge in bankruptcy would release there is, of course, no authority under section 11 for staying the action pending the adjudication in bankruptcy.⁹

(4) Where Property Is in Actual Possession of Bankruptcy Court. — Where there has been an adjudication in bankruptcy and the property of the bankrupt is in the actual custody and possession of an officer of the court, it is not competent for parties who claim to be the owners of such property to maintain a suit in a state court against the trustee in bankruptcy for its possession, the remedy of such parties being by petition in the court of bankruptcy, and the court of bankruptcy will enjoin such suit.¹⁰ So when by an adjudication in after attachment of a debtor's property, but the sheriff has in the meantime sold the property to a bona fide purchaser and collected the proceeds, the proceeds constitute a part of the estate in bankruptcy, to be recovered by the trustee when appointed, on application to the state court for an order from such court directing the sheriff to turn over to him the proceeds, or by action against the sheriff, and that the federal court has no jurisdiction on a summary petition by the trustee to order the sheriff to pay over the proceeds to the trustee.

Supplementary Proceedings Begun Within Four Months of Bankruptcy Proceedings. — Proceedings supplementary to execution in the state court against the bankrupt begun within four months before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings should be enjoined after an adjudication in bankruptcy. "Section 67 provides that any lien obtained by such proceedings within four months shall be dissolved by the adjudication. It is the duty of this court to enforce that provision." In re Kleitchka, 92 Fed. Rep. 901.

bankruptcy the property is in the custody of the bankruptcy court and is afterwards seized on a writ of replevin from a state court, the bankruptcy court may, even though a trustee has not been appointed, enjoin the sale of the property under the writ of replevin and order its restoration to the custody of the court of bankruptcy.¹

b. UNDER FORMER BANKRUPTCY LAWS. — Decisions under former bankruptcy laws may be of some value in determining the construction of the various provisions of the Act of 1898, and without attempting to state the substance of these provisions a short summary of the rulings thereunder is here given.

Property in Possession of Bankruptcy Court. — Under the Act of 1867, as under the Act of 1898, if the property of the bankrupt was in the actual possession of the assignee in bankruptcy, such possession could not lawfully be disturbed or ousted by any person.²

Attachment Suits. — Hence attachment suits instituted after the property has passed into the assignee's hands were enjoined.³ After an adjudication in bankruptcy the bankrupt court might enjoin the prosecution of attachment suits begun before the proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced,⁴ and it was not essential to the exercise of this power that an assignee in bankruptcy should have been appointed.⁵

Action to Foreclose Mortgage. — After adjudication the court might enjoin the prosecution of an action commenced after the adjudication to enforce a mortgage upon property in possession of the assignee.⁶

So the Enforcement of Judgments rendered subsequently to the adjudication, although the action had been commenced after the petition was filed but before the adjudication, might be enjoined.⁷

Restraining Execution Sale. — And an injunction would lie after adjudication to restrain the sale of the property of the bankrupt levied on under an execution on a judgment which was obtained before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy.⁸ It has also been held that although judgment was obtained and execution issued and levied on property of the bankrupt prior to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy the bankrupt court might enjoin the enforcement of the levy.⁹ Until sale is actually made the bankrupt was not divested of his interest in the property under seizure, and the assignee appointed before sale made acquired the bankrupt's interest for the general benefit of creditors.¹⁰

When Sheriff May Sell. — In Pennington v. Lowenstein, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 570, the court held that when a levy was made before commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, the possession being in the sheriff for the purpose of satisfying the process in his hands, he, as trustee, might go on and sell the property, unless enjoined from so doing, and that in such case an injunction would not be granted without a statement showing that a sale under such circumstances would be injurious to the general creditors or to some one having a prior lien.

Supplementary Proceedings on Judgment Rendered Before Commencement of Bankruptcy Pro-

Concurrent Jurisdiction. — It has been stated, however, by the Supreme Court of the United States that the jurisdiction conferred upon the federal courts for the benefit of an assignee in bankruptcy is concurrent with and does not divest that of the state courts in suits of which they had full cognizance. In accordance with this view it was held that where the assignee in bankruptcy of a mortgagor was appointed during the pendency of the proceedings for the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises, he stood as any other purchaser would stand on whom the title had fallen after the commencement of the suit, and that if there was any reason for interposing, the assignee should have himself substituted for the bankrupt, or be made a defendant on petition.¹ While this decision differs somewhat on the facts from those already cited in this section, it is very difficult to reconcile the conclusions reached in this decision with the holdings of the courts in the decisions already cited.

Under the Twenty-first Section of the act it has been held that proceedings by creditors on appeal from a judgment in a state court would be stayed on motion of the bankrupt pending the bankruptcy proceedings.² So where a judgment was obtained in the state court and levy was made before the appointment of an assignee in bankruptcy, but the suit in which judgment was rendered was not instituted until after the petition in bankruptcy was filed, the bankruptcy court might enjoin a sale under the levy.³

Injunction Allowed Only to Aid Assignee. — Under that section of the Act of 1867 (Rev. Stat. U. S., § 5024), authorizing a federal court sitting in bankruptcy when a petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed to restrain all persons from interference with the debtor's property, an injunction to stay proceedings in a state court was allowed only for the purpose of aiding the assignee in bankruptcy to discharge his duty and of protecting the property of the bankrupt estate for equitable distribution among creditors.⁴

Court in Which Bankruptcy Proceedings Pending, Could Alone Enjoin. — Under the 21st section of the Act of 1867 no other court than that in which the bankruptcy proceedings were pending had power to enjoin interference by action or otherwise with the bankrupt's property.⁵

ceedings. — Where judgment had been obtained in a state court, execution issued and returned unsatisfied, and an order made on proceedings supplementary to execution by the examination of the judgment debtor, a stay of all proceedings on the order might be directed by the bankruptcy court until the question of the discharge of the bankrupt should have been determined. In re Reed, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 1, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,637.

Actions Commenced to Save Statute of Limitations. — If a creditor who asserted that his claim against a bankrupt would not be barred by a discharge was allowed to commence suit in the state court for the purpose of saving the statute of limitations or securing testimony, the suit, after this object had been obtained, could be stayed to await the question of the debtor's discharge. In re Ghirardelli, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 343, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,376.

1. Concurrent Jurisdiction. — Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 521, in which case it was said: "It is a mistake to suppose that the bankrupt law avoids of its own force all judicial proceedings in the state or other courts the instant one of the parties is adjudged a bankrupt. There is nothing in the act which sanctions such a proposition. * * * The opinion seems to have been quite prevalent in many quarters at one time that the moment a man is declared bankrupt, the District Court which has so adjudged draws to itself by that act not only all control of the bankrupt's property and credits, but that no one can litigate with the assignee contested rights in any other court, except in so far as the Circuit Courts have concurrent jurisdiction, and that other courts can proceed no further in suits of which they had at that time full cognizance; and it was a prevalent practice to bring any person who contested with the assignee any matter growing out of disputed rights of property or of contracts into the bankrupt court by the service of a rule to show cause, and to dispose of their rights in a summary way. This court has steadily set its face against this view."

2. Stay of Appeal Pending Bankruptcy Proceedings. — Matter of Meyers, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 424; Matter of Leszynsky, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 487; Matter of Metcalf, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 78.

3. Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, in which case it was further said that by express statutory provision the assignment related back to the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy and vested title in the assignee as of that date.

4. Injunction Allowed Only to Aid Assignee. — Sargent v. Helton, 115 U. S. 348, where it was further held that the statute did not authorize an injunction, at the suit of a purchaser of property sold under order of the bankruptcy court, to enjoin a sale of the same lands about to be made upon the order of a state court.

5. Court in Which Bankruptcy Proceedings Were Held Could Alone Enjoin. — Matter of Richardson, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 517.

Adverse Claimants. — The power to enjoin the prosecution of suits in the state courts and to punish those interfering with property in possession of the assignee presupposes that the adverse claimant may go into the bankruptcy court and have his rights there adjusted.¹

Under the Law of 1841. — Under the bankruptcy law of 1841 it was held that where a party took advantage of the insolvency laws of a state after the act named went into operation, and an assignee was duly appointed in pursuance of the state law, and the party subsequently filed a petition to be declared a bankrupt, an injunction would issue against the assignee under the state laws to restrain him from intermeddling with the property of the bankrupt.²

XII. POWER OF STATE COURTS TO ENJOIN PROCEEDINGS IN FEDERAL COURTS.

— As shown in the preceding section, a federal court cannot, except in the few instances specified, enjoin proceedings in a state court which has first acquired jurisdiction of the cause. It is equally well settled, on the other hand, that a state court has no power to enjoin proceedings in a federal court.³ The rule is to be limited, however, to proceedings begun in a federal court before proceedings begun in the state courts. It does not apply where jurisdiction of the state courts has first attached.⁴ Where the state and federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction of the subject-matter and parties to the controversy, that tribunal which first actually takes the jurisdiction will retain it.⁵

XIII. POWER OF COURTS OF ONE STATE OR COUNTRY TO ENJOIN PROCEEDINGS IN ANOTHER STATE OR COUNTRY — 1. Power to Enjoin Proceedings of Courts of Foreign Country. — In the earliest reported case in which this question arose it was held that the courts of one country had no jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings in the courts of another country.⁶ That decision, however, met with general dissatisfaction, and the power of a court of equity of one country to restrain its own citizens from the prosecution of suits in foreign countries is now well established.⁷ An injunction will be granted to stay proceedings

Where Bankrupt's Property Is Situated in Another District. — In In re Litchfield, 13 Fed. Rep. 863, it was held that where there were adverse claimants of the property of the bankrupt, situated in districts other than the one in which the bankruptcy proceedings were pending, the assignee might defend his title in a state court and file a bill in the Circuit or District Court of the United States praying that the rights of the adverse claimants be adjusted and that the actions in the state courts be enjoined. The assignee could not proceed by summary petition.

Where Process in State Court Is Not Served. — Where process has been served and an injunction issued in the federal court, jurisdiction attaches to the exclusion of a state court in which a suit has been previously commenced but no process served. After the issuing of such an injunction the state court has no authority to take action or make orders in regard to the subject-matter over which jurisdiction had been exercised by the federal court, nor have its officers any right to the possession of or control over such subject-matter. *Bell v. Restraining Actions in Consular Court. — An injunction may be granted by a state court to restrain persons from prosecuting a claim be-between citizens of one country begun in another country subsequent to a decree in the courts of the first-named country¹ or to an action commenced in such courts.² It is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court, however, that litigation should have been subsequently commenced in the foreign country;³ and even where there is no question as to the foreign litigation being or not being necessary or being or not being likely to be so effectual as litigation in the domestic courts, still if a person within the jurisdiction of the court of chancery is instituting in a foreign court proceedings the institution of which is contrary to equity and good conscience, the court will restrain the prosecution of such foreign suit.⁴ While the jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings in a foreign court is undoubted, an injunction will nevertheless be refused if from any cause it appears likely to be more conducive to substantial justice that the foreign proceedings should be left to take their course.⁵

2. Power to Enjoin Proceedings of Courts of Sister State — a. UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES INJUNCTION GRANTED — Statement of Rule. — In a few of the early decisions it was held that courts of chancery will not enjoin a suit or proceeding previously commenced in a court of another state.⁶ This doctrine, however, has been very generally repudiated, and it is now well settled that whether suit was or was not first commenced in the court of another state, a court of chancery of the domestic state, upon a proper cause being shown, has authority to restrain persons within its jurisdiction from proceeding in suits in the courts of other states.⁷

Clear Equity Must Be Shown. — All that is necessary to sustain the jurisdiction in such cases is that the plaintiff should show a clear equity and that the defendant should be subject to the authority and within the reach of the process of the court.⁸

To Prevent Injustice and Oppression a court of equity of one state will always enjoin a party to an action before it from prosecuting an action subsequently commenced in another state where the matters litigated and the relief which may be had are substantially the same in both cases.⁹

Evasion of Domestic Laws. — And the courts very frequently exercise their jurisdiction to enjoin a citizen of one state from prosecuting an action against another citizen of the same state in a sister state, for the purpose of evading fore an American consul abroad, where the consul has not jurisdiction of the proceedings instituted before him. Dainese v. Allen, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 212.

Snetzer*, 25 Ohio St. 520; Vermont, etc., R. Co. v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 46 Vt. 792.

As the Decree of the Court in Such Case Is Pointed Solely at the Party, and does not extend to the tribunal where the suit or proceeding is pending, it is wholly immaterial that the party is prosecuting his action in the courts of a foreign state or country. Sandage v. Studabaker Bros. Mfg. Co., 142 Ind. 157, 51 Am. Rep. 165; Teager v. Landsley, 69 Iowa 725; Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen (Mass.) 545; Claffin v. Hamlin, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 62 How. Pr. (N. 8. Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen (Mass.) 545.

9. Where Court of Domestic State First Acquires Jurisdiction — Kittle v. Kittle, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 72; Mead v. Merritt, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 402; Field v. Holbrook, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 377.

the laws of his own state.¹ Jurisdiction here proceeds on the principle that the citizens of a state are bound by its laws and cannot be permitted to evade them to the injury of other citizens.² It has accordingly been held that a court of equity of one state will enjoin an action by one of its citizens against another citizen in the courts of another state in which it is sought to subject to the payment of a claim or judgment wages or personal earnings which by the laws of the former state are exempt from being applied to the payment of such claim.³ Especially is this true where it is made an offense by statute to send a claim against the debtor out of the state for collection, in order to evade the exemption law;⁴ and the fact that the plaintiff has other legal defenses available in the court in which the action is brought does not affect his right to an injunction.⁵ So an action in the courts of another state will be enjoined where the effect of allowing suit to go to judgment would be to give to the party instituting it a preference over other creditors and to defeat the operation of the domestic insolvency law.⁶

"Full Faith and Credit" Clause. — The granting of an injunction under such circumstances is not in violation of that provision of the Federal Constitution which requires that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state.⁷

Attempt to Avoid Effect of Decision of Domestic Court. — A domestic court of equity will also enjoin the prosecution of an action in the court of another state brought to avoid a decision of the court of the domestic state differing from the rule upon the same subject in the state where the action is commenced.⁸

b. UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES INJUNCTION DENIED. — On the other hand, it is a good ground for refusing an injunction to restrain proceedings in the courts of another state, that the court in which the injunction is sought is unable to enforce its writ if granted, because the parties to be enjoined reside outside of the state and have no property within it upon which a writ of sequestration might operate.⁹ Nor will the domestic court interfere where the parties seeking the injunction can obtain full and adequate relief in the court in which the action is brought.¹⁰ It is not a sufficient ground for the issuance of an injunction that the complainant prefers to have the matter adjudicated by his own tribunals,¹¹ or that the rules of evidence in an action against the representative or survivor of a decedent are more liberal in the state where the action is commenced,¹ or that the decision of the court in which the action is brought may differ from that of the court of the domestic state, or those of other courts of equal authority.²

XIV. ENJOINING LEGISLATIVE OR EXECUTIVE ACTION.—Legislative enactments of a state or of a municipal corporation, within the scope of its powers, cannot be restrained by injunction even if the threatened act, if passed, will be unconstitutional and void. After its passage the judiciary may declare it unconstitutional, but previous to that time judicial relief cannot be invoked.³ Nor will a bill lie to enjoin officers representing the executive authority of a government from performing their official functions, such as carrying into execution certain Acts of Congress;⁴ and it makes no difference whether the officer against whom the injunction is sought is described in the bill as an incumbent of an office or simply as a citizen of the state.⁵ A detailed treatment of this question so far as it relates to elections will be found in an earlier volume of this work.⁶

XV. MODIFICATION, DISSOLUTION, REINSTATEMENT, AND CONTINUANCE—

1. Modification of Injunction.—The court has power to modify or partially dissolve a preliminary injunction where the peculiar equities of the case render such action necessary in order to do exact justice between the parties.⁷ This power is in no way affected by the fact that the court in granting the injunction may have chosen to discuss the merits of the case. This circumstance cannot operate to change the real character of the injunction.⁸ The order of modification of an injunction will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of discretion by the court granting it.⁹

2. Dissolution of Injunction—a. WHAT COURTS HAVE POWER TO DISSOLVE.—The power vested in a court to grant an injunction necessarily implies the power of the same court to dissolve or modify it;¹⁰ and this power

Enjoining Action at Law.—It is always in the power of the defendant who has been enjoined from further proceedings at law to move for a modification of the injunction so far as to allow a trial of the action of ejectment, and it would be the duty of the court to make modification or not, according to the circumstances and the character of the relief sought. *Hill v. is expressly given by statute in some jurisdictions.¹ If the dissolving power is to be exercised by any one else than the same judge who made the order, statutory authority therefor is necessary.²

b. DISCRETION OF COURT IN DISSOLVING INJUNCTION. — The dissolution of an injunction, like the granting of it, is largely a matter of judicial discretion, to be determined by the facts of each particular case; and except in cases of palpable abuse of this discretion, or a clear showing of error on the part of the trial court, the reviewing court will not interfere with or in any manner control this discretion.³

In Regard to the Dissolution of Restraining Orders the court exercises the same discretion as in dissolving preliminary injunctions.

Nature of Discretion. — This discretion is not an arbitrary one, but a sound legal discretion to be exercised with a proper regard to established rules; and if it is abused or is exercised upon insufficient grounds the order of the trial court will be reversed.¹ In determining whether an injunction should be dissolved, the court should always consider the inconvenience and injury which a continuance will cause to the defendant or which a dissolution will cause to the complainant, and its discretion should always be exercised in favor of the party who is most likely to suffer injury.² Stating this proposition in another form, the court, on motion to dissolve, will balance the inconvenience which would arise from continuing the injunction and from dissolving it; and if there is a greater risk of doing mischief by continuing the injunction than by dissolving it, it will be dissolved.³

c. DISSOLUTION BY COURT OF ITS OWN MOTION. — Where it appears certain that an injunction has been issued in a case where the party asking it had no right to it, the court will dissolve the injunction on its own motion.⁴

d. IPSO FACTO DISSOLUTION. — The dismissal of the bill operates ipso facto as a dissolution of the injunction.⁵ Where an injunction is granted restraining the defendant until further order of the court, a failure to procure an order making it perpetual does not ipso facto dissolve the injunction; it continues in force until dissolved or modified.⁶

e. ABATEMENT OF SUIT. — The abatement of the suit does not dissolve the injunction or make it inoperative.⁷ The rule is that if the suit abates by the death of either the plaintiff or the defendant, the party against whom the injunction issued or his representatives may have an order requiring the plaintiff or his representatives to revive within a stated time, or that the injunction be dissolved.⁸

f. DISSOLUTION AND DISCHARGE DISTINGUISHED. — Some of the courts make a distinction between discharge and dissolution of an injunction.

This discretion will not be controlled or interfered with by a reviewing court unless it has been abused. Harrell v. Griffin, 92 Ga. 571; Cotter v. Cotter, 16 Mont. 63.

Adequate Security. — In the exercise of its discretion the court will also consider the fact that the defendants are protected by adequate security for any loss they may sustain. Cornell v. Utica, etc., R. Co., 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 190; Church of Holy Innocents v. Keech, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 691; Spear v. Cutter, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 486; Huron Waterworks Co. v. Huron, 3 S. Dak. 610; Hicks v. Compton, 18 Cal. 206.

Solvency of Defendant. — And the court will consider the defendant's solvency and ability to respond in damages. Stevenson v. Fayerweather, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 21 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 449; Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Kerr, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 382; Storer v. Coe, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 661.

1. Discretion Should Not Be Arbitrary. — DeGodey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 157; Connally v. Cruger, 40 Ga. 259; Sinner v. Moles, 38 Iowa 31; Fleischman v. Young, 9 N. J. Eq. 620; Chetwood v. Brittan, 2 N. J. Eq. 438; Dent v. Summerlin, 12 Ga. 5.

2. Consideration of Balance of Convenience. — Hicks v. Compton, 18 Cal. 206. See also New York Printing, etc., Establishment v. Fitch, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 97; Michel v. O'Brien, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 408; Huron Waterworks Co. v. Huron, 3 S. Dak. 610.

3. Atty.-Gen. v. Liverpool, 1 Myl. & C. 208.

4. Dissolution ex Mero Motu. — Conover v. Ruckman, 32 N. J. Eq. 685; National Gaslight

Co. v. O'Brien, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 38 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 271.

5. Dismissal of Bill Dissolves Injunction. — Green v. Pulsford, 2 Beav. 70; Thomsen v. McCormick, 136 Ill. 135; Rubon v. Stephan, 25 Miss. 253; Kimball v. Alcorn, 45 Miss. 149; Yale v. Baum, 70 Miss. 225; Disbro v. Disbro, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 148.

Effect of Appeal Bond. — An undertaking on appeal upon the decree dismissing the bill does not operate to continue the injunction. Disbro v. Disbro, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 147.

6. Failure to Procure Order Perpetuating Injunction. — Curtis v. Crane, 38 Iowa 459.

7. Abatement of Suit. — Fowler v. Scott, 11 Ark. 675; Hawley v. Bennett, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 163.

8. Revivor on Abatement by Death of Parties. — Chandos v. Talbot, Sel. Cas. in Ch. 24; Hill v. Hoare, 2 Cox Ch. 50; Hawley v. Bennett, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 164; Kenner v. Hord, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 204; Carter v. Washington, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 203.

Punishment for Breach — When Application Made. — Where a suit abates by the death of a complainant, those who succeed to his rights may apply to the court to punish a breach of an injunction which has taken place either before or after his death, as soon as they have taken the preliminary steps to revive the suit, either by filing a bill of revivor or otherwise; and it is not necessary for them to wait until a decree of revivor is actually obtained. Hawley v. Bennett, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 164.

A motion to dissolve, it is held, can be founded only on a want of equity in the bill or the full and complete denial of its equity by the answer, and is a waiver of any irregularity which has occurred in the granting of the writ. A motion to discharge is directed at irregularities in granting and issuing the writ.¹

g. GROUNDS OF DISSOLUTION — (1) Want of Jurisdiction to Issue. — An injunction will always be dissolved where the court by which it was granted was for any reason without jurisdiction so to do,² as where there is an adequate remedy at law,³ or where the amount involved is insufficient,⁴ or where the bill for the injunction is brought in the wrong county,⁵ or where the court is without jurisdiction to grant injunctions at all.⁶

(2) Improvident Issuance of Injunction. — As a general rule, where an injunction has been improvidently issued through some mistake or misapprehension of the chancellor, it may be dissolved.⁷ Nevertheless, an injunction, Effect of Discharge on Right to Set Up Usury. — If an injunction enjoining a judgment at law on the ground of usury be properly dissolved, the ground of usury cannot be legitimately relied upon in a suit in chancery brought to set up a lost injunction bond; but if the injunction be discharged because the complainant refused to execute a new injunction bond, it constitutes no bar to the administrator and surety of the complainant in a new bill setting up usury in the original transaction. Clark v. Young, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 58.

Waiver of Objection to Jurisdiction. — When a foreign citizen appears and by counsel pleads to the jurisdiction, he is not held to have waived his exemption by appearance. On the other hand, appearance and pleading and answering to the merits constitute a waiver of his exemption and an assent to the jurisdiction. Adams v. Lamar, 8 Ga. 83.

though improvidently sued out, will not be dissolved if the facts of the case show that on the dissolution the party will immediately be entitled to that form of remedy on other grounds.¹

(3) Vagueness and Uncertainty of Writ. — It is good ground for the dissolution of an injunction that it is so vague and uncertain in its terms that the defendant is not able to determine therefrom what he is restrained from doing.²

(4) Laches in Prosecuting Cause. — Where an injunction has been granted the complainant must use due diligence in the prosecution of his case, or the injunction will be dissolved.³ In applying the rule as stated, it has frequently been held that the neglect of the complainant to take out and serve a subpoena within a reasonable time, or within the time fixed by rules of court, is just ground for dissolving the injunction.⁴ So it has been held a ground for dissolving an injunction that the complainant has failed to use due dili-

What Injunction Order Should Show. — The injunction order should show upon its face all those things which it is necessary for the defendant to know in order to obey it, and should plainly and specifically indicate to the defendant all the acts which he is thereby restrained from doing, without calling upon him for inferences or conclusions to be arrived at only by a more or less uncertain process of reasoning, and about which the parties might well differ in opinion either as to the facts or as to the law. The act prohibited must be the doing of some tangible or distinct thing or series of things, to be clearly pointed out and described. Lyon v. Botchford, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 57; Sullivan v. The Rule Rests upon the Soundest Principles of Justice. — The injunction deprives the party enjoined of the exercise of his legal rights. It is designed to prevent irreparable or serious injury to the legal rights of the complainant until the merits of the controversy can be heard and adjusted. Justice requires that the defendant should be restrained from the exercise of his rights no longer than is essential to investigate the matter at issue. When the restraint is extended further it operates injuriously to the rights of the defendant. Hoagland v. Titus, 14 N. J. Eq. 81.

New York. — Waffle v. Vanderheyden, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 46.

Vermont. — Howe v. Willard, 40 Vt. 654.

Effect of Service on Some of the Defendants. — The neglect of the complainant to serve a subpoena and injunction on some of the defendants named in the bill is not a ground for dissolving the injunction as to the defendants on whom the service is made. Seebor v. Hess, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 85.

Failure to Serve Process — When Not Ground for Dissolution. — The rule stated in the text does not apply when the defendant resides abroad beyond the reach of the process of the court, otherwise than he may be affected by the service of it upon his attorney at law upon the special order of the court. In such a case the delay in the prosecution of the case is not imputable to the plaintiff; on the contrary, the defendant may be brought into contempt if within a reasonable time he does not answer the bill, and it is the duty of his representative in court to obtain his answer. Read v. Consequa, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 174.

gence in taking testimony and setting down the cause for hearing,¹ or that he has failed to bring all the parties interested before the court,² or that he has failed to use due diligence in obtaining an answer from the defendants.³

Exceptions to Rule. — The rule that want of diligence is ground for dissolving the injunction does not apply where the situation of the cause enables the defendant to proceed.⁴ So if the delay is not without reasonable excuse, and is not wilful, and a dissolution of the injunction will put it out of the power of the court to do effectual justice, the injunction will not be dissolved.⁵

(5) Laches in Seeking Dissolution. — After a long acquiescence in an order for an injunction an application for its dissolution will be refused in cases where the delay and acquiescence of the defendant in the injunction have so changed the status of the parties that the subsequent dissolution would injuriously and inequitably affect the complainant or permit the defendant to exercise some inequitable or unfair advantage acquired by reason of his acquiescence or delay.⁶ Where no circumstances appear which would render the dissolution of the injunction inequitable or injurious to the complainants by reason of the delay of the defendant in moving for a dissolution, or by reason of his acquiescence therein for a long period of time, such delay and acquiescence will constitute no ground for refusing to dissolve the injunction.⁷

(6) Defective Service of Process. — The fact that the injunction has been served out of the jurisdiction of the court and in a manner not conformable to the settled practice is not a ground for dissolution.⁸ So where process has been regularly sued out, but irregularly served, and the complainant proceeds to take out new process as soon as the irregularity is discovered, the irregular service constitutes no ground for dissolution.⁹

(7) Want of Notice of Application. — Notice of an application for a

On an application to dissolve an injunction for want of due diligence on the part of the complainant in not taking the testimony and setting the cause down for hearing, it is no answer to say that both parties are actors, and that the defendant might have entered a rule to close testimony, taken his evidence, and brought the case on for hearing. *Hoagland v. Instance. — An injunction was obtained before answer. The defendant filed his answer, but delayed moving to dissolve until several months after replication, and at a period when the evidence would have been published but for the defendant having obtained an enlargement of the publication. 8. Defective Service of Process. — Corey v. Voorhies, 2 N. J. Eq. 5, in which case it was said that defective service might very properly be urged on a motion for attachment for contempt in case of disobedience to its requirements, but was no reason for setting aside the injunction and order.

9. Process Regularly Sued Out but Irregularly Served. — Payne v. Cowan, Smed. & M. Ch. (Miss.) 26.

Irregularity in Service of Notice of Motion for Injunction. — Upon a motion to dissolve an injunction, informality in the service of notice of motion for injunction is cured by the appearance of the defendant and the filing of answers in the case. Under these circumstances, objection on account of informality, or even necessity of notice, is waived. Brammer v. Jones, 2 Bond (U. S.) 100.

Failure to Serve Both Injunction and Subpœna — Effect. — Although it is irregular to serve an injunction upon a party without serving him also with a subpœna to appear and answer the bill, it is too late to give notice of an application to dissolve an injunction on that ground after a subpœna has been served on him. Seabor v. Hess, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 85.

temporary injunction is largely a matter of statutory regulation. In the absence of a statute requiring notice the necessity thereof must depend largely on the particular circumstances of each case. If notice is required by statute, or if the circumstances of the case are such that the defendant is entitled to notice, the want of it will constitute a good ground for dissolving the injunction,¹ unless the right to notice is waived by the defendant. This, it seems, may result from the voluntary appearance of the defendant,² or from a failure, until the cause is heard on appeal, to object for want of notice.³ The court will not set aside an injunction for want of notice if the case appears to be one in which the rule to give notice might properly be dispensed with. In such case the court will retain the injunction and order the complainant to pay the costs of the application.⁴

(8) Complainant's Disobedience of Writ. — It is a good ground for the dissolution of an injunction that the complainant has neglected or refused to comply with the terms upon which the injunction was granted.⁵

(9) Defective or Insufficient Bond — (a) In General. — In a number of cases the court has dissolved temporary injunctions on the ground that no bond was given, or that the bond given was insufficient, or has said that this was a good ground for a motion to dissolve.⁶ If by these decisions it is meant that no opportunity to give bond or to rectify a deficient bond should be given to the complainant, they are against the weight of authority, which is to the effect that an injunction should not be dissolved absolutely and unconditionally because of failure to give bond or because the bond given is for any reason defective. The proper practice on motion to dissolve is to make an order that within a reasonable time a sufficient bond shall be given or that the injunction shall be dissolved.⁷ This practice is especially commendable when it is mani-

Denial of Validity of Bond by Party Filing It. — Where on the granting of an injunction an insufficient bond is filed, and subsequently a sufficient bond is filed, and suit is brought thereafter upon the bond, the defendants in such suit cannot set up as a defense that they did not have leave of court to file the bond. They should not be permitted to deny the validity of their own act. Farni v. Tesson, 51 Ill. 393.

fest from the record that the complainant would be immediately entitled to another writ in case the one which had been granted were dissolved.¹ Of course, if it is apparent that irrespective of the absence of a bond no injunction should have been granted, the injunction should be dissolved without giving to the complainant an opportunity to file bond.²

(b) Requiring Additional Security. — If, during the pendency of an injunction, the solvency of the surety in an injunction bond be doubtful, the defendant may move the court to dissolve the injunction unless additional and satisfactory security be given.³

Court May Require or Permit Additional Security — General Rule. — Either by express statutory authority or in accordance with the rules of equity practice, it is competent for the court, in the case of prolonged litigation in which an injunction is in force, to require an additional bond and further security.⁴ Where it appears that the party will be immediately entitled to the same remedy an injunction will not be dismissed on account of insufficient security, but the judge may, in his discretion, permit the giving of additional security.⁵

Requirement of Bond with New Conditions on Continuing Injunction. — In continuing an injunction on the complainant's application the court may require, as a condition, the giving of additional or new security, or a bond with new and enlarged conditions calculated completely to indemnify the parties affected if it is finally adjudged that the injunction was allowed without right.⁶ In requiring a new bond the court may order that it be given in the place of and as a substitute for the bond originally given, and the latter will be thereby discharged, even without the consent of the obligee therein.⁷

(10) Statute Legalizing Acts Enjoined. — An injunction will be dissolved where, subsequent to its granting, a statute which legalizes the acts restrained is enacted.⁸

(11) Unconstitutionality of Statute on Which Injunction Based. — An Error to Dissolve Without Giving Time to Perfect Bond. — In Smith v. Harrington, 49 Miss. 771, the motion to dissolve was on the ground that "no good and sufficient bond" was filed with the "conditions prescribed by law" and "duly approved." It was held that it was error to dissolve the injunction without giving the statutory time to the complainants to perfect their bond.

Effect on Sureties on Original Bond. — Where a new bond is given because the original bond is insufficient, all the sureties on the original bond signing the new bond with additional sureties are bound alike. Odell v. Henry, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 302.

Additional Security for Person Not a Party. — Where the ordinary injunction bond would furnish no security to a person not a party to the proceeding, but whose interests are affected thereby, the court may, it seems, order that an additional bond be given to protect such interests; and if the plaintiff takes the benefit of an injunction obtained on such terms he will not be heard afterwards to insist that such additional bond was without warrant of law and void. Kinealy v. Staed, 55 Mo. App. 176.

6. Right of Court to Require. — Kent v. Bierce, 6 Ohio 336. See also Newton v. Russell, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 40.

Necessity for New Bond on Continuing Restraining Order. — In Preiss v. Cohen, 112 N. Car. 278, it was held that where an undertaking had been given before the issue of a restraining order, it was not necessary for the court, on the return of the order to show cause and upon continuing the injunction to the trial, to require a new undertaking from the plaintiffs unless it was shown that the bond already given was insufficient.

Power of Supreme Court to Require New Bond — New York. — In Disbro v. Disbro, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 147, it was held that the Supreme Court has the power at general or special term to revive and continue an injunction in its discretion in all proper cases, and upon such terms as to security and otherwise as it may deem just. But it should be upon the giving of a new undertaking, in the same manner as upon the granting of the original injunction.

7. Effect of Noncompliance with Order of Court. — Where the court orders that a second injunction bond be given, which order is not substantially complied with, the first bond is not discharged. Kent v. Bierce, 7 Ohio (pt. ii) 209, 6 Ohio 336.

injunction will be dissolved where the sole foundation for it is a statute which has been declared unconstitutional.¹

(12) Misrepresentation or Suppression of Material Facts. — When it is shown on a motion to dissolve an ex parte injunction that the plaintiff has misstated the case, by either the misrepresentation or the suppression of material facts, the injunction will be dissolved on that ground alone.² The reason is that the utmost good faith must be required of those who seek to put in motion the power of a court of equity through this extraordinary process.³ Where an injunction has been obtained on a misrepresentation of facts, it does not alter the case that the misrepresentation was through inadvertence, misinformation, or otherwise.⁴ It is no excuse for the complainant to say that he was not aware of the importance of any facts which he has omitted to bring forward.⁵ A motion to dissolve an injunction obtained by misrepresentation will be entertained even though the injunction is about to expire.⁶

(13) Technical Errors or Inaccuracies in Bill or Order. — On a motion to dissolve an injunction, mere technical errors or inaccuracies of form in the bill on which the injunction is granted or in the order granting the injunction are not available. Errors involving matters of substance only will be regarded.⁷

(14) Where Injunction Has Become Useless. — Where an injunction can no longer subserve any useful purpose because the grounds on which it was granted no longer exist, or because of matters which have occurred since it was granted, it will be dissolved.⁸

h. EFFECT OF DISSOLUTION. — The dissolution of an injunction does not Misrepresentation Must Be of Material Facts. — The misrepresentation or suppression must be of material facts and must affect the merits. If the facts misrepresented or misstated were not such as to lead the court to grant the injunction, it will not be dissolved therefor. Brown v. Newall, 2 Myl. & C. 571; Frome v. Chosen Freeholders, 33 N. J. Eq. 464.

Misrepresentation as Bar to Second Injunction. — The dissolution of an ex parte injunction on the ground of misrepresentation and suppression of material facts is no bar to an application for a second injunction. Fitch v. Rochfort, 18 L. J. Ch. 458.

Laches in Applying for Dissolution. — Although an injunction obtained ex parte upon a statement upon which material facts are concealed or misrepresented would, on a speedy application, be dissolved with costs, yet such concealment or misrepresentation is not a sufficient ground for a motion to dissolve after a period of several months has elapsed before notice of such motion is given; nor will the question whether there has been such concealment or misrepresentation be considered on appeal from an order made by the court in which the injunction was granted, and by which order the injunction was continued and the costs reserved. *Bell v. necessarily operate as a dismissal of the bill. If further proceedings are necessary for relief, the complainant is entitled to continue his cause as an original suit,¹ and no motion to retain the bill is necessary.² Where the dissolution of the injunction leaves nothing more to be decided in the injunction suit the court may properly order that the cause be stricken from the docket.³

3. Continuance of Injunction — a. JUDICIAL DISCRETION AS TO CONTINUANCE. — The continuance of an injunction rests very largely in the discretion of the trial judge, and must be governed by the nature and circumstances of each particular case;⁴ and it is a settled rule that a reviewing court will not interfere with the action of the trial judge unless there has been abuse of this discretion.⁵ Except in cases entirely free from doubt, a reviewing court will not interfere with or control the discretion of the trial judge in continuing an

Where Case Is Made for Injunction. — Where the plaintiff by his petition makes a case for injunction, and if sustained by evidence would be entitled on final decree to an injunction as asked, it is error to dismiss the petition. Russell v. Wilson, 37 Iowa 377.

The sustaining of a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction only determines that upon the showing there made the plaintiffs are not entitled to a preliminary injunction. Such order is not a bar to the right of perpetual injunction upon full proof at the final hearing. Fisher v. Beard, 40 Iowa 625; Barnes v. Racine, 4 Wis. 454.

Dissolution of Injunction Against Judgment. — Where the answer denies all the material allegations of a bill for an injunction, the court should dissolve the injunction and decree damages on the amount of the judgment enjoined; but the bill should not be dismissed if there be sufficient equity on its face to give jurisdiction to the court. Bettison v. Jennings, 8 Ark. 287.

Bill for Injunction and General Relief. — The assignor and assignee of a bond being made defendants to the bill exhibited by the obligor for an injunction and for general relief, he alleging that he paid the money to the assignor without notice of the assignment, if the allegation be afterwards disproved, whereupon the injunction is dissolved and the bill dismissed as to the assignee, the cause ought yet to be retained and further proceedings had to give to the complainant relief against the injunction until the final hearing.¹ It is not necessary to the continuance of an injunction that it should be clear that the complainant will succeed at the hearing. Where upon the whole case there is probable cause to believe that he will succeed, the injunction should be continued.²

6. GROUNDS FOR CONTINUING INJUNCTION — Where Dissolution Would Amount to Denial of Relief. — Where the dissolution of an injunction would be practically a denial of the relief to which the complainant might show himself entitled on final hearing, the injunction should be continued.³

Where Dissolution Would Effect Irreparable Injury. — If upon the hearing of a motion to dissolve an injunction it appears that a dissolution might work an irreparable injury to the complainant, the injunction should be continued to the hearing.⁴

Where Dissolution Would Work Greater Injury than Continuance. — Although the equity of the bill may be fully answered, the court will continue the injunction to the final hearing if the dissolution would work a greater injury than the continuance of the process.⁵ It is not an inflexible rule that when the special equities of a bill are denied the injunction must be dissolved. The court considers all the circumstances, and if greater injury is likely to ensue from the order of dissolution than from the order retaining the injunction, the safer and customary rule is not to dissolve until a hearing is had on the merits.⁶ The granting and continuing of injunctions rest merely on equitable grounds, and are not exercised for the mere purpose of protecting legal rights irrespective of the claim of the party to equitable relief.⁷ An injunction may be retained under the special circumstances of the case although the defendant has filed an answer fully denying the equities of the bill.¹

Doubtful Cases. — If on the coming in of the answer the mind of the court is not free from doubt whether the equities of the bill are sufficiently answered, the injunction will be continued until the final hearing.²

Where Doubtful Questions of Law Are at Issue. — The injunction should be continued where the equity of the complainant's case rests on important questions of law which cannot be met by an answer.³

Where Sufficient Time Has Elapsed after the granting of a temporary injunction within which the case could have been reached for trial and disposed of on the merits, an order continuing the injunction is proper.⁴

Relief Obtainable by Final Decree. — A temporary injunction will not be continued where to allow its remaining in force would be practically to give to the complainant all the relief which he could obtain by means of a final decree.⁵ Nor should an injunction be continued where the statements to sustain it are improbable.⁶

Where Answer Sets Up New Matter. — Where new matter is set up in the answer by way of avoidance, the injunction should be continued.⁷

Effect of Final Judgment. — An injunction which has been granted upon an interlocutory order is superseded by the judgment in the action. If it is intended that it shall remain in force, it must be expressly continued.⁸

Where the complaint states facts sufficient to authorize a temporary injunction, and the answer raises serious issues the determination of which is doubtful, it is not error to continue the injunction to the hearing on the merits, especially where it appears that the subject-matter of the case will remain unimpaired. Whittaker v. Hill, 96 N. Car. 2.

Where Additional Evidence Indispensable. — Where it is apparent from the answer that there are still questions respecting which additional information is indispensable to the decision of the case, a dissolution should not be granted, especially where the relief was asked for the prevention of irreparable injury. Fargo v. Ames, 45 Iowa 494; Huffman v. Hummer, 17 N. J. Eq. 263.

Where Continuance Will Work Great Injury to Defendant. — The fact that the continuance of an injunction will work a great injury to the defendant will have much weight with the court in the consideration of the question whether the injunction should be continued. Furman v. Clark, 11 N. J. Eq. 135.

Where the Questions Involved Are of Great Importance and it is manifestly to the interest of both parties that they should be deliberately heard and finally decided, and the court is of the opinion that the case is not free from doubt, an order refusing to dissolve an injunction should be sustained. *Jersey City v. Fraud. — Where fraud is the gravamen of the application for an injunction, it does not necessarily follow that the injunction will be dissolved on the coming in of an answer denying all the material allegations of the petition. The court, in its discretion, may continue the injunction until the final hearing; and this, it is apprehended, is the usual course.¹

4. Reinstatement or Revival of Injunction. — A court of equity is always open for the reinstatement of a preliminary injunction.² While the suit remains undetermined it may be reinstated or revived on a showing that the dissolution thereof was irregularly or improperly obtained. It may be reinstated on an application to the court dissolving it;³ it may be reinstated by the appellate court;⁴ or the court dissolving it may be directed by the appellate court to reinstate it.⁵ Even after the injunction has ceased to exist the court has power to reinstate it on a proper showing.⁶ The reinstatement of an injunction is not as a matter of course, but cause must be shown by further evidence.⁷

XVI. VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION — 1. Duty to Obey and Consequences of Disobedience. — It is the duty of the parties to obey the injunction so long as it judgment dissolving a temporary injunction, the injunction is continued in force by the supersedeas. If the judgment is affirmed, the supersedeas bond covers the damage sustained by reason of the injunction during the pendency of the appeal. Barber v. Edelen, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 971.

6. Injunction Which Has Ceased to Exist. — Parker v. Judges, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 461.

Appeal Not Reinstatement of Injunction. — After an order dissolving an injunction is duly entered no subsequent appeal can of itself affect the validity of the order or revive the process and give force and effect to it. If an injunction could be revived by the mere act of the party in filing an appeal, it would give to him not only the power of control over the orders of the court, but of creating an injunction. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 111; Wood v. Dwight, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 295.

Affirmance of Order of Dissolution as Affecting Right to Reinstatement. — In Tone v. Brace, Clarke (N. Y.) 503, it was held that the court had power to reinstate or renew an injunction after a dissolution, even though the order of dissolution had been affirmed by the chancellor upon appeal and an appeal had been taken from the chancellor's decision to the Court for the Correction of Errors; but the court said that this power would not be exercised except in extreme cases and upon new facts presented either by petition or supplemental bill.

Effect of Reinstatement on Execution Issued. — The order of a judge of the Court of Appeals reinstating an injunction does not reach back and render irregular an execution issued in the interim. Young v. Davis, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 153.

Reversal of Order Dissolving Injunction. — If a preliminary injunction is dissolved on granting a nonsuit, and the judgment is afterwards reversed on appeal, the plaintiff, on a proper application, will be entitled to a renewal of the injunction upon filing the remittitur in the court below. Harris v. McGregor, 29 Cal. 125.

7. Reinstatement Not Matter of Course. — James v. Downes, 18 Ves. Jr. 522; Tucker v. Carpenter, Hempst. (U. S.) 440; Livingston v. Gibbons, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 250; Low v. M'Gee, 5 Yerg. Dissolution as to Person Improperly Made Party. — Where a person not interested in the subject-matter of the suit, and who is not contemplating the commission of the grievance complained of, has been joined as a party defendant, the injunction should be dissolved as to him. Brammer v. Jones, 2 Bond (U. S.) 100.

Suspending Operation of Injunction. — Either a perpetual (Penitlarge v. Beeston, 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 41, or a temporary (Edison Electric-Light Co. v. U. S. Electric Lighting Co., 59 Fed. Rep. 501) injunction may be suspended remains in force. The violation of an injunction is a contempt of the court from which the process issues, and is punishable by it as such.¹ The defendant is bound at his peril to obey the injunction,² and if he is in doubt as to what he may do without violating the injunction, he should ask a modification of it or a construction of its terms.³ The punishment imposed is by fine or imprisonment, or both.⁴

Violation Pending Appeal. — The violation of an injunction pending an appeal is a contempt, and is punishable as such. It is well settled that an appeal from an order granting an injunction or from a decree for a perpetual injunction does not operate as a supersedeas and does not permit the defendant to disregard the injunction.⁵

2. What Constitutes Violation — Knowledge of Injunction. — To put a person in contempt for violating an injunction it is necessary that he should have knowledge of the injunction.⁶ If, however, he has actual knowledge thereof he is punishable as for contempt for its violation although he has not been served with notice.⁷ It is altogether immaterial how the defendant acquires the information of the existence of the injunction; when once he has been apprised of the fact he is legally bound to desist from what he is restrained and inhibited from doing.⁸ In the notes hereto are set out some decisions illustrative of specific acts held in violation or not in violation of injunctions.⁹

Limit of Fine and Imprisonment. — In contempt for a violation of an injunction, the limit of fine and imprisonment to be inflicted is within the sole discretion of the court which issued the injunction. Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Rogers, 38 Conn. 123.

5. Violation of Injunction Pending Appeal. — Kentucky, etc., Bridge Co. v. Krieger, 91 Ky. 625. See the title CONTEMPT, vol. 7, p. 55.

Supersedeas on Dissolution of Injunction — Effect. — The entire force of a judgment dissolving an injunction is rendered temporarily nugatory by the execution and service of a supersedeas; the injunction is left where it was before the rendition of the suspended judgment, and the appellee is guilty of contempt if he disregards it. Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 83 Kv. 299; Elizabethtown, etc., R. Co. v. Ashland, etc., St. R. Co., 91 Kv. 478.

Iowa 558. See the title CONTEMPT, vol. 7, p. 55.

8. Knowledge from Any Source Sufficient. — Ulman v. Ritter, 72 Fed. Rep. 1000.

What Notice Is Sufficient. — Notice of an injunction will be sufficient if it proceeds from a source which is entitled to credit and informs the defendant plainly and unequivocally what acts he must refrain from doing. Cape May, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 35 N. J. Eq. 422.

9. Acts Held to Constitute Violation of Injunction — In General. — It is a violation of an injunction restraining the defendant from disposing of property to deliver the property, though sold previously to the service of the injunction. Jewett v. Bowman, 27 N. J. Eq. 171.

The commencement of an action for the purpose of settling the rights of the parties in certain lands described in the complaint and to obtain an accounting for rents and profits is a violation of an injunction order granted in another action which restrained the plaintiff in the first-named action from in any manner interfering with or disposing of such real estate. Stubbs v. Ripley, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 625.

Procuring Dissolution by Court Having No Authority and then doing what the injunction forbids is punishable as a contempt. People v. Van Buren, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 635, 18 N. Y. Supp. 734.

Continuance of Act Complained of. — That the injury complained of was done before the service of the injunction, and that the defendant's acts since the service have done no further injury to the complainant, will not relieve the defendant from the effect of his violation of the injunction, when such acts were intended to make the injury complete, and the obvious intention of the interdict was to prohibit him from continuing the injury. Thropp v. Field, 25 N. J. Eq. 166.

Forbidding Acts "Except in Extraordinary Emergencies." — Where the injunction commands the defendant absolutely to desist from the doing of certain acts "except in extraordinary

The Violation of the Spirit of an Injunction, even though its strict letter may not have been disregarded, is a breach of the mandate of the court,¹ which will not allow its process to be disregarded or evaded on merely technical grounds.²

Acts Not Prohibited by Injunction. — The defendant will not be punishable as for contempt for the performance of acts which are not within the terms of the injunction³ or where the injunction order has not taken effect.⁴ So one will not be punished for disobeying an injunction which the parties have previously stipulated shall be dissolved, even though the order vacating the writ is needed to complete the record.⁵ Furthermore, an injunction is never retroactive. It can never make violative of or disobedient to its provisions an act which was done before the injunction was granted.⁶

3. Violation by Corporation. — An injunction against a corporation is binding upon it and the individuals through whom it acts; and where such injunction is violated the corporation may be fined and the officers through whom it acts may be punished.⁷

4. Violation by Agents, Attorneys, and Servants. — The injunction not only requires the defendant himself to refrain from doing the acts prohibited, but also prohibits him from procuring or permitting the acts by his agents, servants, or attorneys. He is not liable, however, for acts done by his agents, servants, or attorneys in disobedience of his commands.⁸

5. Violation by Strangers. — The defendant is not punishable for acts done by strangers without his knowledge or consent;⁹ but he may render himself punishable by aiding, counseling, or abetting others in the violation thereof.¹⁰ emergencies it becomes unavoidable," the defendant, in order to escape the consequences of disobedience to the order, must show that the acts were unavoidable. Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 105.

Acts Held Not Violation of Injunction. — Employing counsel to protect the interests of an association is not a violation of an injunction against the further transaction of business. Beneville v. Whalen, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 508.

Bringing an action on a note is not a violation of an injunction against negotiating it. Mason v. Jones, 1 Hayw. & H. (D. C.) 329.

The bringing of an action to recover possession of personal property is not a violation of an injunction obtained by a third person restraining the plaintiff in a replevin suit for disposing of or interfering with such property. Van Wagoner v. Terpenning, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 423.

Where an injunction enjoined the defendants from affixing certain words, among which was the word "porous," to any plasters manufactured or sold by them, or to the boxes in which they were put up, and this was the extent of the prohibition, their employment of the word "porous" in newspaper advertisements, circulars, etc., to announce the manufacture, but not to designate the plaster, by name applied or affixed, as a porous plaster, was held not a violation of the injunction. Porous Plaster Co. v. Seabury, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 35.

Failure to Give Bond — Effect. — Where an injunction is allowed in a cause pending, but an undertaking therefor is never given, fine and imprisonment for contempt in disobeying such injunction are not authorized, and an arrest will constitute false imprisonment. Diehl v. Friester, 37 Ohio St. 473.

Burden of Proving Violation. — A party who alleges that an injunction has been violated, and proceeds for the contempt to punish the offender, must show with reasonable certainty the facts by which the charge may be established. Verplank v. Hall, 21 Mich. 469.

1. Violation of Spirit of Injunction. — Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Dimes, 17 Sim. 38; Partington v. Booth, 3 Meriv. 148; Bickford v. Welland R. Co., 17 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 484; *Muller v. Obscure Phraseology of Writ. — If the phraseology of the writ be inartificial or obscure, but its spirit or intention be manifest, the party will not be excused for its violation. Blair v. Nelson, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 1.

2. Evasion on Technical Grounds. — Endicott v. Mathis, 9 N. J. Eq. 110.

T.) 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 139. See the titles CONTEMPT, vol. 2, pp. 44, 58; ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, vol. 3, p. 278.

9. Violation by Strangers. — Slater v. Merritt, 75 N. Y. 268; Batterman v. Finn, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 32 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 501.

10. Société, etc., v. Western Distilling Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 96; Blood v. Martin, 21 Ga. 127;

Usually an injunction only binds those who are named in the injunction order, and one not named therein is not punishable for disobedience thereof.¹

6. Matters in Excuse or Mitigation — a. IN GENERAL. — The motive with which a person acts in committing a violation of an injunction is immaterial and furnishes no excuse.² Thus a common rumor that an injunction has been dissolved will not excuse the breach of it;³ nor can a corporation excuse its violation of an injunction upon the ground that its imperative duty to the public demanded such violation.⁴ It is likewise no excuse for disobedience of the terms of an injunction that the defendant acted under the advice of counsel,⁵ especially where he performs acts other than those which he is advised he may do.⁶ Nevertheless, if the advice was given and acted upon in good faith, the court is authorized to take this fact into consideration in determining the extent of the punishment which shall be awarded for the breach of the injunction.⁷ The fact that the contempt was not wilful may be considered in mitigation of punishment.⁸ Failure to comply with an injunction requiring affirmative action on the part of the defendant may be sufficiently excused by a showing of poverty and sickness.⁹

b. ORDER ERRONEOUSLY OR IMPROVIDENTLY GRANTED. — Disobedience of an injunction order cannot be justified by setting up that it was improvidently or erroneously granted. Until the order is vacated it must be obeyed, unless it can be shown that it is absolutely void. The order must be questioned by direct proceedings to review it, not by disobedience.¹⁰ In proceeding against a party for contempt in violating an injunction the court will not look into the merits of the case in which the injunction issued. The only question is whether the injunction has been violated.¹

c. INVALIDITY OF ORDER. — Where the court is without jurisdiction to grant an injunction, and the injunction is absolutely void, a violation thereof does not render the defendant liable to punishment as for contempt.²

XVII. BOND, DAMAGES, COSTS, AND EXPENSES—1. The Bond—a. NECESSITY FOR—(1) At Common Law—Formerly Unnecessary.—In the early stages of equity jurisprudence temporary injunctions were often issued simply on an ex parte showing by the plaintiff, without requiring any bond or other security, and if on a final hearing it transpired that the injunction was issued without just cause, and it was therefore dissolved, the party enjoined could not recover damages occasioned thereby unless it was shown that the injunction was sued out through malice and without probable cause. In other words, the only relief for injury, however grievous or oppressive, which the defendant had on defeating a wrongful writ of injunction was an action as in other cases for malicious prosecution, to sustain which it was necessary to allege and prove that the injunction was sued out through malice and without probable cause.³

Resultant Injustice to Defendant Gave Rise to Practice of Requiring Bond.—The frequent injustice and the great and irreparable damage thus following hasty and ill-advised injunctions encouraged the equity courts to require of the plaintiff, in their discretion, when asking this extraordinary writ, some pledge or security to answer for such damages as might be done to the defendant in case on final hearing it should be determined that there were no grounds for such injunction.⁴

Right of Court to Require Bond Now Unquestioned.—At the present time, independently of any statutory provision on the subject, the power of courts of equity, on application for a preliminary injunction, to require from the complainant a bond to indemnify the defendant against whom the injunction is sought, as a condition precedent to granting the injunction, is too well established to be open to question.⁵

Requirement of Bond Discretionary at Common Law.—Where there is no statute expressly directing that a bond shall be given before the issuance of an injunc-

No Matter How Unreasonable and Unjust the Injunction May Be in its terms, it must, nevertheless, be obeyed until dissolved. Stimpson v. Putnam, 41 Vt. 238.

Failure to Indorse Order on Petition.—The fact that the order allowing an injunction is not indorsed on the petition, but is indorsed on a separate piece of paper, will not prevent a violation of such injunction being contempt. Jordan v. Circuit Ct., 69 Iowa 177.

Papers Insufficient to Make Out Case.—In proceedings to punish for contempt any violation of an injunction it is no defense that the injunction was granted on papers which did not make nor tend to make a sufficient case for injunction. Koehler v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 17 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 307.

Defective Service.—In a proceeding to punish an agent of the defendant for violating an injunction it cannot be set up as a defense that the writ had not been served on the defendant himself, it being intended to restrain his agents and servants as well as himself. Daly v. Amberg, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 379, 126 N. Y. 490.

Injunction Granted under Unconstitutional Statute.—It is no defense to a prosecution for violation of an injunction that the statute prohibiting the act enjoined is unconstitutional; the injunction, though erroneous, is not void. People v. Bouchard, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 459.

tion to stay the execution of a judgment, the matter is left to the discretion of the court;¹ but the practice of requiring bonds, except, perhaps, in extreme and exceptional cases, seems to be almost universally prevalent.²

Plaintiff's Liability Dependent on Bond in Absence of Malice. — The liability of the plaintiff in an injunction suit to respond to the defendant depends upon the obligation exacted from the plaintiff before awarding an injunction to him,³ and without some security given before the granting of an injunction order, or without some order of the court or judge requiring some act on the part of the plaintiff which is equivalent to the giving of security, the defendant has no remedy for any damages which he may sustain from the issuing of the injunction unless the conduct of the plaintiff has been such as to give ground for an action for malicious prosecution.⁴

(2) Under Statutes. — The Justice of Requiring Some Security from the party applying for an injunction, that he will indemnify the defendant against any loss which the latter may sustain by the wrongful issue of the injunction, is so apparent that the codes and statutes of most of the states expressly provide that a bond shall be required as a condition of granting an injunction.⁵

Statutes Mandatory. — It has been held that such statutes are mandatory,¹ and that the court cannot dispense with the filing of a bond as preliminary to the injunction when it is required by the statute.²

As Condition for Issuing Restraining Orders. — In some states where an undertaking is expressly required as a condition of issuing an injunction the statute discriminates between injunctions and restraining orders, and no bond is required before issuing the latter,³ though even in these jurisdictions it would seem proper for the court to require bond.⁴ In one state, however, it is expressly held that before making an order for temporary restraint, security may be required as upon the allowance of an injunction.⁵

(3) When Unnecessary — Injunction on Final Decree. — The statutes requiring bond apply only to temporary injunctions. They have no application to final injunctions which conclusively settle the rights of the parties, leaving no

A Judgment Entered by Confession upon a bond with warrant of attorney is within the provisions of the New Jersey statute requiring that the defendant shall give security before the issuing of an injunction to stay proceedings at law in any personal action after verdict or judgment. Marlatt v. Perrine, 17 N. J. Eq. 49. See also Farrington v. Freeman, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 572.

1. Statutes Mandatory. — James v. Withers, 114 N. Car. 474; Wilson v. Featherstone, 120 N. Car. 449; Hunt v. Smith, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 277.

Security Required Even Where Complainant Sues in Forma Pauperis. — In North Carolina it is held that under a statute providing that no injunction shall issue except upon security, a complainant, even if permitted to sue in forma pauperis, must give bond, on the ground that the statute allowing a suit in forma pauperis does not embrace an injunction. Howze v. Green, Phil. Eq. (62 N. Car.) 250.

2. Courts Cannot Dispense with Bond Required by Statute. — Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433; State v. Kearny County, 42 Kan. 739; Carroll v. Farmers', etc., Bank. Harr. (Mich.) 197; State v. Greene, 48 Neb. 327; Phillips v. Pullen, 45 N. J. Eq. 157; Miller v. Parker, 73 N. Car. 58; Hunt v. Smith, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 277; Lomax v. Picot, 2 Rand. (Va.) 247. See also Harless v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 14 Ind. App. 545, holding that in Indiana the court has no discretion except in a few cases specially provided by statute, but can issue a temporary injunction only upon the filing of an undertaking.

Bond by Administrators or Other Fiduciaries. — In some cases, statutes in reference to bonds as a condition to the issuance of an injunction have been held to embrace executors, administrators, and other fiduciaries. Habersham v. Carter, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 526; Osborn v. Ellis, 1 Ind. 451; Mahan v. Tydings, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 351. In others the contrary has been held. State v. Johnson, 28 W. Va. 73; Lomax v. Picot, 2 Rand. (Va.) 247.

In Brown v. Speight, 30 Miss. 45, it was held that it is right and proper that the court or chancellor should require such bond when an injunction is granted at the instance of an administrator, to restrain proceedings at law before judgment.

Receivers Required to Give Bond. — It is erroneous to grant an injunction at the suit of a receiver without requiring him to give the usual injunction bond, and the bond given by him as a receiver for the purpose of his general duties is not sufficient. Keeler v. White, 10 Wash. 420; Cherry v. Western Washington Industrial Exposition Co., 11 Wash. 586.

3. Restraining Orders. — San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 216; In re Mitchell, McCahon (Kan.) 256; Burnett v. Nicholson, 79 N. Car. 548.

4. Requirement of Bond Held Discretionary with Court. — Adams v. Crittenden, 4 Woods (U. S.) 618; San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 216.

5. Methodist Churches v. Barker, 18 N. Y. 463.

Where Complainant's Right Is Clear. — So it has been held that where upon the case made by the bill the right of the complainant is clear and the infraction of that right is established, the complainant will not be required to give security for such damages as the defendant may sustain by reason of the injunction.² Under such circumstances the fact that the injunction occasions a serious loss to the defendant affords no just ground of complaint, since he is merely deprived of the enjoyment of that which belongs to another.³

Where Answers Show Case for Perpetual Injunction. — Though upon failure to file a bond before the issuance of an injunction the defendants might petition for an order requiring the giving of the bond by a reasonable time,⁴ yet when the answers have come in and show on their face a case for a perpetual injunction, and the continuance of the writ is not dependent upon a question of law or fact to be subsequently established, it would, it has been held, be wholly unnecessary to require a bond.⁵

Injunctions to Restrain Sales of Exempt Property. — Injunctions granted simply to restrain the forced sale of property claimed to be exempt from sale under the constitution of a state are not injunctions to stay proceedings at law within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the granting of injunctions to stay proceedings at law unless bond is given.⁶

Suits Instituted in Courts of Foreign State on Judgment. — In one state it has been held that where a judgment has been recovered and a suit has been brought thereon in the courts of another state, such suit does not come within the prohibition that no injunction shall issue to stay proceedings at law in any personal action, after verdict or judgment, on the application of the defendant in such proceedings unless a deposit be made or a bond be given.⁷

Where Complainant Is Unable to Give Bond. — In at least one state, where the statute requires that bond shall be given before an injunction is issued, it has been held that where summary process by injunction is prayed, and the bill justifies such process, and affidavit is made of the truth of the statements of the bill and that the complainant is unable to give the bond of indemnity or other security, the chancellor shall receive ex parte evidence of the truth of the statements of the bill and of the accompanying affidavit, and if they appear to be true shall grant such process without requiring security.⁸

Specific Statutory Exceptions. — In some jurisdictions, while as a general rule a bond is required before the issuance of an injunction, it is provided that a defendant in executory process can arrest the proceeding without bond, by alleging one of several specified reasons.⁹

1. Injunction on Final Decree. — Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Cluggish, 143 Ind. 347; Com. v. Franklin Canal Co., 21 Pa. St. 130. See also Denny v. Moore, 13 Ind. 418.

2. Where Right to Injunction Is Clear. — Dodd v. Flavell, 17 N. J. Eq. 255.

Bond Dispensed with Because of Bad Faith of Defendant. — In Pasteur Chamberland Filter Co. v. Funk, 52 Fed. Rep. 146, a preliminary injunction against the infringement of a patent was granted without requiring a bond, for the reason that the defendant had been guilty of bad faith towards the plaintiff to such an extent that he was held not equitably entitled to the protection of the usual bond.

3. Reason for Rule. — Dodd v. Flavell, 17 N. J. Eq. 255.

4. See infra, this section, Effect of Issuance Before Execution of Bond.

6. Enjoining Sales of Exempt Property. — Smith v. Gufford, 36 Fla. 481, 51 Am. St. Rep. 37; Lewton v. Hower, 18 Fla. 872.

7. Suit in Foreign Jurisdiction. — Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Titus, 26 N. J. Eq. 94, in which case the court said: "I am of opinion that the legislature meant, by the expression 'proceedings at law in a personal action after verdict or judgment,' proceedings at law in the suit by execution, or otherwise. It would be a reasonable construction to extend the prohibition to a suit at law here upon judgment recovered in this state. A suit at law in another state upon the judgment is not within the meaning of the provision."

8. Inability to Give Bond. — M'Michael v. Grady, 34 Fla. 219; Thompson v. Maxwell, 16 Fla. 773. See also Swepton v. Call, 13 Fla. 337.

9. In Louisiana, under Code Prac., art. 739, 740, the defendant in executory process can arrest the proceeding without bond, by alleging some of the following reasons: (1) That he has paid the debt for which he is sued; (2) that he has been remitted by the creditor; (3) that it has been extinguished by transaction,

(4) Execution of Bond Requisite to Effectiveness of Order — (a) General Rule.

— As a general rule, where the giving of a bond is a condition precedent an injunction should not take effect until the requisite bond is executed.¹

(b) Effect of Issuance Before Execution of Bond — Injunction Irregular and Not Void.

Although the general rule is as just stated, yet it would seem that if by accident the injunction is made to take effect before the bond is executed, this fact will not be sufficient ground for reversing the order granting it.² An injunction thus improperly issued without a bond is irregular but not void.³

Allowance of Time to Execute Proper Bond. — The proper practice in such a case would seem to be to allow a reasonable time after the attention of the party is called to the defect in which to execute a bond, and in default of the execution of a bond within a reasonable time the injunction should be dissolved.⁴

Waiver. — Where during a number of years a defendant makes no objection to the omission of one who has obtained an injunction against him to give bond, it would seem that the defendant may be held to have waived the irregularity by his delay.⁵

6. PURPOSE OF BOND — In General. — An injunction bond is intended as security for damages in case it is finally decided that the injunction ought not to have been granted.⁶ It is designed to indemnify against immediate and actual loss, but not against remote injuries.⁷

What Liability Imported by Bond. — The liability imported by an injunction bond would seem to depend upon the purpose of the injunction proceedings in novation, or some other legal manner; (4) that time has been granted to him for paying the debt, although this circumstance be not mentioned in the contract; (5) that the act containing the privilege or mortgage is forged; (6) that it was obtained by fraud, violence, fear, or some other unlawful means; (7) that he has a liquidated account to plead in compensation of the debt claimed; (8) finally, that the action for the recovery of the debt is barred by prescription. Hodgson v. Roth, 33 La. Ann. 941.

1. Injunction Inoperative Without Bond. — Elliott v. Osborne, 1 Cal. 396; Carter v. Mulrein, 82 Cal. 167, 16 Am. St. Rep. 99; Van Fleet v. Stout, 44 Kan. 523; State v. Perrine, 17 N. J. Eq. 49; Clarke v. Hoomes, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 23; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Patton, 5 W. Va. 234.

Indorsement that Operation Is Suspended until Bond Given. — Upon issuing an injunction against proceedings at law, the clerk must indorse on the writ that its operation is suspended until bond is given, and unless bond is given by all the parties applying for it the injunction will be inoperative. Davis v. Dixon, 1 How. (Miss.) 64, 26 Am. Dec. 695; Boswell v. Wheat, 37 Miss. 610.

12, in which case it was held that an injunction issued without the bond required by statute is a nullity. Pell v. Lander, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 554; Miller v. Parker, 73 N. Car. 58. But it should be observed that in this last case the order was vacated upon the peremptory demands of the statute, because no such bond had been given.

Filing of Bond and Issuance of Writ on Same Day. — The filing of an injunction bond and the consequent issue of the writ on the same day are regarded as concurrent acts, and a recital in the bond that the obligors "have obtained" such writ will be interpreted in the present tense, and held to refer to the writ actually issued. Wallis v. Dilley, 7 Md. 237.

Bodine*, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 292.

which it was given; thus where the bond is given to secure an injunction of a judgment, the obligor will be liable for the amount of the judgment.¹ Where, however, a bond is given by a stranger to a judgment to secure an injunction against the sale of a particular article of property, such bond, whatever may be its conditions, would seem to operate in equity only as a security to the party enjoined, for any injury that may accrue, and not for the amount of the debt.²

c. BY WHAT STATUTES CONSTRUED. — An injunction bond must be construed according to the statute in force at the time of its execution.³

d. EXECUTION, SIGNATURE, AND APPROVAL OF BOND — By Whom Executed. — Although under the statutes of one state it has been held that the party applying for the injunction must give or execute the bond,⁴ yet as a general rule it would seem that the statutory requirement of a bond will be satisfied if the party obtaining the injunction gives or furnishes the bond, and that he need not himself execute it.⁵

Time of Execution. — As the execution of an injunction bond, where such bond is required, is requisite to the effectiveness of the order granting an injunction, the bond is always to be executed before the execution of the writ.⁶

Place of Execution and Signature. — The proper place for the execution and signature of an injunction bond is a matter controlled entirely by statutory provisions, differing in the various states.⁷

1. Bond to Secure Injunction of Judgment. — Hunt v. Scobie, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 460.

Undertaking Applies to all Defendants though Part Only Restrained. — In Tucker v. New Brunswick Trading Co., 44 Ch. D. 249, Cotton, L. J., said: "As a general rule, I think that when an injunction is granted the undertaking as to damages ought not to be confined to the persons restrained. In Pemberton on Decrees (4th ed.) 435, it is said: 'The undertaking applies to all the defendants, although one or more only may be restrained.' Mr. Pemberton does not refer to any authority for this; but I consider it to be a correct statement of the practice."

2. Bond Given by Stranger to Judgment. — Hanley v. Wallace, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 184.

3. By What Statutes Governed. — Mix v. Vail, 86 Ill. 40; Alwood v. Mansfield, 81 Ill. 314; Krug v. Bishop, 44 Ohio St. 221.

A Statute Passed Before the Execution of an injunction bond, but which does not take effect until afterwards, is as to such undertaking no statute, and can have no effect on the bond. Mix v. Vail, 86 Ill. 40.

4. Execution by Party Applying for Injunction. — Com. v. Franklin Canal Co., 21 Pa. St. 117.

5. Plaintiff Need Not Execute Bond. — Pence v. Durbin, 1 Idaho 550; State v. Eggleston, 34 Kan. 714; Teasdale v. Jones, 40 Mo. App. 243.

Execution by Competent Persons Furnished by Plaintiff or Attorney. — In Leffingwell v. Chave, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 703, it was held that under Code Pro. New York, § 222, which required an undertaking "on the part of the plaintiff, with or without sureties," an undertaking executed by any persons of competent ability furnished by the plaintiff or his attorney was sufficient. The plaintiff need not execute it.

In Louisiana the defendant has the right to require bond from the plaintiff, or some one duly authorized to execute it for him. State Bank v. Wilson, 19 La. Ann. 3.

In Florida it was held that a statute prohibiting attorneys from signing bonds as sureties does not protect them from signing bonds as principals or in behalf of the parties. Cunningham v. Tucker, 14 Fla. 251.

Signature by Principal. — In those jurisdictions where an injunction bond may be executed by others than the principal, upon the dissolution of an injunction, the damages sustained thereby may be assessed against the plaintiff though he did not sign the bond. Teasdale v. Jones, 40 Mo. App. 243.

Injunction in Name of City — Bond Signed by City Officers. — In Hawthorne v. McArthur, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 526, it was held that where city officers have sued out an injunction in the name of the city, and have signed their names to the bond, they cannot escape liability thereon because the city did not sign the bond.

6. Execution of Bond Before Issuance of Injunction. — Adams v. Olive, 57 Ala. 249.

Bond Need Not Be Tendered with Bill. — In Negro Charles v. Sheriff, 12 Md. 274, it was held that it was no objection to the bill for an injunction that no injunction bond was tendered, since no such bond could be tendered until the court had fixed the amount of the bond.

7. In Kentucky an injunction bond must be executed in the office of the clerk of the court whose judgment is enjoined, and it would seem that one which is not executed there is on that account invalid, and the defendant may, on motion, have the injunction discharged on that ground. If, however, no such motion for discharge is made, it will furnish no defense to a suit on the bond that it was not executed in the clerk's office. Cobb v. Curtis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 235.

In Virginia the statute (now Code Va., § 3442) does not require that the bond upon an injunction to a judgment shall be executed in the presence of the court, but it must be

Approval of Bond. — So also the approval of an injunction bond and the designation of the proper officer by whom it is to be approved are matters regulated solely by statute. Thus in some jurisdictions it is expressly provided by statute that in all cases in which bonds are required as a condition precedent to the issuing of a writ of injunction the surety shall be approved by the court, judge, or master granting or ordering the injunction.¹

Power Not to Be Delegated. — And where this is the case the power to approve cannot be delegated to the clerk.²

Approved by Clerk. — In other jurisdictions, however, the duty of approving and accepting injunction bonds where the injunction bond is granted out of court is expressly imposed upon the clerk.³

e. TO WHOM PAYABLE. — Usually, it is apprehended, the statutes require that the bond shall be made payable to the adverse party,⁴ but a substantial compliance with this requirement will be sufficient.⁵

f. CONSIDERATION FOR BOND. — In the case of an injunction against a judgment, the suspension and delay of execution to be produced by the executed before the clerk of the court in which the judgment was. That it was given before the court will not, however, vitiate such bond. Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 676.

In Louisiana it is unnecessary that an injunction bond should be signed by the surety in the presence of the clerk of the court where the genuineness of such signature and the sufficiency of the surety are satisfactorily proved. Catalogne v. Bauries, 4 La. Ann. 567.

See also the various local statutes.

Effect of Obligor's Signature in Blank. — It would seem that an obligor who leaves his signature in blank to an injunction bond with the clerk of the court will be bound thereby when such bond is filled up. Breedlove v. Johnston, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 517.

1. Acceptance and Approval Not Imported by Delivery to Clerk. — The mere delivery to the clerk of an injunction bond does not import its acceptance and approval by the court. Burgess v. Lloyd, 7 Md. 178.

Indorsement of Court's Approval. — It is proper but not absolutely essential that the approval of the court or judge should be indorsed upon the bond. Griffin v. Wallace, 66 Ind. 410.

Evidence of Approval. — "In Patterson v. Stair, 26 Ind. 137, the court say: 'We must also consider the fact that the undertaking was read to the court, and thereupon the restraining order was continued, as conclusive evidence that the court approved the bond.'" Griffin v. Wallace, 66 Ind. 410.

2. Power Cannot Be Delegated to Clerk. — Rutan v. Lagonda Nat. Bank, 72 Ill. App. 35. But a bond so approved may be good as a common-law obligation. Bochner v. Automatic Time Stamp Co., 80 Ill. App. 27.

As to the nature of the office of clerk of court, the clerk's powers, duties, and liabilities, see the title CLERKS OF COURT, vol. 6, p. 132.

3. Approval by Clerk. — Greathouse v. Hord, 1 Dana (Ky.) 105.

Presumption as to Approval. — In Catalogne v. Bauries, 4 La. Ann. 567, it was held that approval by the clerk will be presumed from the fact that he issued the injunction. See also Burgess v. Lloyd, 7 Md. 178, holding that where the bond is tendered and remains in the clerk's office and is acted under by the authorities the presumption of acceptance and approval by the proper authorities will arise.

Clerk May Take Other Surety than That Designated. — The security in an injunction bond, the injunction being granted out of court, is to be approved by the clerk, and so much of the order granting an injunction as designates the surety to be taken on the bond is a nullity. The injunction is valid though the clerk take a different surety from the one designated in the order. (Acts of Kentucky, Sess. 1826, 127.) Greathouse v. Hord, 1 Dana (Ky.) 105.

4. Bonds Payable to Adverse Party. — Scott v. Fowler, 7 Ark. 299; Cay v. Galliot, 4 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 282; Parker v. Boyd, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. Rep. 1031.

5. Bonds Held Sufficient. — In Scott v. Fowler, 7 Ark. 299, it was held that an injunction bond executed to Harrell and Scott, upon suing out a writ of injunction against a judgment at law rendered in favor of Harrell for the use of Scott, is a bond to the "adverse party," within the statute, and suit may be maintained thereon for breach of its condition.

Under the South Carolina statute of 1784, the bond of one applying for a stay of execution by injunction must be taken in the name of the plaintiff. In Cay v. Galliot, 4 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 282, the master, on granting the injunction, took a bond payable to himself and his successors in office and then assigned it to the plaintiff. It was held that the bond was good, and that the assignees could sue thereon.

In Parker v. Boyd, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. Rep. 1031, under a statute requiring that the bond should be payable to the adverse party, the bond in a suit to enjoin an execution, where the sheriff and his deputy and the judgment creditor were codefendants, was made payable to the judgment creditor "et al." It was held not reversible error to refuse to quash such bond.

In Thompson v. Hall, 67 Ga. 627, where the bond was made payable to "Hull & Long," instead of to "Hall & Long," it was held that the mistake was one which was relievable either in equity or at law, and that the discrepancy was not available in an action on the bond.

injunction have been held to be, prima facie at least, a sufficient consideration for the execution of the bond.¹

g. TO WHOSE BENEFIT BOND INURES. — An injunction bond (at least where the injunction is granted before service of process) is for the benefit of all the defendants who are enjoined, whether served or not served; and if a defendant, without any service of the summons or injunction upon him, obeys the injunction, he is entitled to damages upon the dissolution of the injunction.²

h. FORM AND CONDITIONS OF BOND — (1) When Prescribed by Statute — Generally. — In many of the states the statutes requiring a bond as a condition precedent to an order of injunction prescribe, at least in general terms, the conditions of such bond.³

Statutory Provisions Must Be Complied With. — Where the conditions of an injunction bond are thus prescribed the bond must conform in terms or substantially to the statutory requirements.⁴ While it has been held that where the injunction bond is defective in not securing the damages according to the conditions prescribed in the statute this will be ground for dissolving the injunction, though not for dismissing the petition,⁵ it is well settled that the statute need not be literally and strictly followed, and that a bond in substantial compliance with the statute is valid.⁶

1. Consideration for Execution of Bond. — Mahan v. Tydings, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 351, in which case it was held that an injunction bond executed by an executor to enjoin a judgment against him as such is prima facie upon good consideration, and a plea averring only that it was without consideration is bad.

2. To Whose Benefit Bond Inures. — Cumberland Coal, etc., Co. v. Hoffman Steam Coal Co., 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 16.

3. Conditions Prescribed by Statute. — See Stirlen v. Neustadt, 50 Ill. App. 378; Alexander v. Gish, 88 Ky. 13; Barrett v. Bowers, 87 Me. 185; Menken v. Frank, 57 Miss. 732; Boswell v. Wheat, 37 Miss. 610; Teasdale v. Jones, 40 Mo. App. 243; Palmer v. Foley, 71 N. Y. 106; Hubbard v. Fravell, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 304; Pillow v. Thompson, 20 Tex. 206; Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 676.

Representative Statutes. — According to Neal v. Taylor, 56 Ark. 521, it would seem that the statute no longer requires the condition that the sureties will abide the decision of the suit for injunction and pay all sums of money adjudged against their principal therein. See Hunt v. Burton, 18 Ark. 188; Blakeney v. Ferguson, 18 Ark. 347.

In Illinois, Starr & Curt. Annot. Stat. (1896), c. 69, par. 8, requires that before an injunction shall issue to enjoin a judgment, the complainant shall give a bond with surety, "conditioned for the payment of all moneys and costs due to the plaintiff in the judgment, and such damages as may be awarded against the complainant in case the injunction is dissolved." The bond so required is for payment of the judgment, i. e., "all moneys and costs due to the plaintiff in the judgment," as well as for all damages which may be awarded in case of a dissolution of the injunction." Stirlen v. Neustadt, 50 Ill. App. 378.

In Missouri it is provided by Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5493, that a bond shall be required "in such sum as the court or judge shall deem sufficient to secure the amount or other matter to be enjoined, and all damages that may be occasioned by such injunction to the parties enjoined or to any party interested in the subject-matter of the controversy, conditioned that the plaintiff will abide the decision which shall be made thereon, and pay all sums of money, damages, and costs that shall be adjudged against him if the injunction shall be dissolved." Teasdale v. Jones, 40 Mo. App. 243.

Kentucky. — In Alexander v. Gish, 88 Ky. 13, the court said: "Section 278, Civil Code, provides that the court, judge, or officer granting an injunction, shall, in the order granting it, fix the amount of the bond to be given, and may prescribe its terms. If the terms be not prescribed, it shall be to the effect that the party giving it will pay to the party enjoined such damages as he may sustain if it be finally decided that the injunction ought not to have been granted. The terms prescribed in the bond in question are substantially the same as are required in section 278."

4. Substantial Compliance with Statute Necessary. — Bein v. Heath, 12 How. (U. S.) 168; Stirlen v. Neustadt, 50 Ill. App. 378; Palmer v. Foley, 71 N. Y. 106; Pillow v. Thompson, 20 Tex. 206.

Omission of Statutory Condition Ground for Reversal. — Stirlen v. Neustadt, 50 Ill. App. 378.

5. Bond Defective in Not Securing Damages According to Statutory Provisions. — Pillow v. Thompson, 20 Tex. 206.

6. Substantial Compliance Sufficient. — Alexander v. Gish, 88 Ky. 13; Barrett v. Bowers, 87 Me. 185; Palmer v. Foley, 71 N. Y. 106; Episcopal Church v. Varian, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 644; Cay v. Galliot, 4 Sirobb. L. (S. Car.) 282; James v. Reynolds, 2 Tex. 250; White v. Clay, 7 Leigh (Va.) 68; Cooper v. Tappan, 4 Wis. 362.

Obligors Bound Where Bond Contains Material Part of Condition. — In Holliday v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 276, it was held that although the conditions of an injunction bond are not so extensive as the statute requires, yet if it contains a material part of the condition required, the bond is not void, but binds the obligors to the extent of such condition or conditions.

(2) Terms Discretionary with Court in Absence of Statute. — In the absence of statutory provisions prescribing the conditions of an injunction bond, the matter is within the discretion of the chancellor.¹

(3) Necessity for Direction in Order. — Where the law furnishes a pattern for an injunction bond, and prescribes its conditions, an order to take such bond "as the law directs" is sufficient. When, however, the chancellor grants an injunction in cases where the law furnishes no model, the order itself ought to direct what kind of a bond should be taken.²

Clerk May Not Insert Conditions Unless Authorized. — It is essential, however, that the conditions of the bond be fixed either by statute or in the exercise of the court's discretion, and the clerk of a court has no power to insert in such bond conditions not prescribed by law or the fiat of a judge.³

(4) Insertion of Unnecessary Conditions Surplusage. — The insertion in an injunction bond of conditions not required by law, but not against law, will not vitiate those that are required by law,⁴ and the conditions not required will, it seems, be regarded merely as surplusage.⁵

i. AMOUNT OF BOND — In General. — Although in some cases the amount of an injunction bond is fixed by statute,⁶ yet as a general rule it would seem Defeasance Clause Improperly Worded. — An injunction bond should, of course, contain a defeasance clause, but the fact that such clause is so worded as to leave the obligors bound notwithstanding they may pay all damages that the plaintiff may sustain has been held not to avoid the bond. Washington v. Timberlake, 74 Ala. 259.

When Strict Conformity Necessary. — "To render a bond void for want of conformity to a statute it must be made so by express enactment, or must be intended as a fraud on the obligors by color of law by an evasion of the statute." Janes v. Reynolds, 2 Tex. 250.

1. Discretion of Court as to Conditions. — Walker v. Pritchard, 135 Ill. 109; Newell v. Partee, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 325; Hubbard v. Fravell, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 304; Black v. Caruthers, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 87; Ranning v. Reeves, 2 Tenn. Ch. 263. See also Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433.

In Walker v. Pritchard, 135 Ill. 103, the court said: "We have held that where the collection of a note is enjoined the statute prescribes no rule in regard to the conditions to be inserted in the injunction bond, and that the chancellor may, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, require the complainant to give security for the payment of the debt in case he fails to maintain his suit." See also Billings v. Sprague, 49 Ill. 509; Barnes v. Brookman, 107 Ill. 317.

Court May Not Prescribe Unreasonable Conditions. — In cases not provided for by the statutes, the court should prescribe the conditions of the bond; and if unreasonable ones are prescribed, the bond is not obligatory in equity to the extent that it is unreasonable, being without consideration. Hanley v. Wallace, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 192. See also Moore v. Hallum, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 511.

2. Stevenson v. Miller, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 306, 13 Am. Dec. 271.

Effect of Order Granting Injunction "On Usual Terms." — In Harman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 676, the judge, in granting an injunction to a judgment for money, indorsed on the bill, "Injunction granted on the usual terms," without stating on what terms it was to become operative. The bond given was in a penalty about double the amount of the judgment, and was in other respects as prescribed by the statute. It was held that this order would seem to be a compliance with the law directing that the judge should prescribe the amount of the penalty, but that however this might be, the obligors to the bond were estopped from denying that the penalty of the bond conformed to the direction of the judge who awarded the injunction.

3. Hubbard v. Fravell, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 304, citing Coltart v. Ham, 2 Tenn. Ch. 356, and Enochs v. Wilson, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 228. As to the nature of the office of clerk of a court, the clerk's powers, etc., see the title CLERKS OF COURTS, vol. 6, p. 132.

4. Unnecessary Conditions — Effect. — Johnson v. Vaughan, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 217; Hopkins v. Morgan, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 1; Menken v. Frank, 57 Miss. 732; Rubelman Hardware Co. v. Greve, 18 Mo. App. 6; Holliday v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 276. See also Miller v. Montague, 1 Disney (Ohio) 167.

5. Conditions Not Required — Surplusage. — Johnson v. Vaughan, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 217; Greathouse v. Hord, 1 Dana (Ky.) 105; Holliday v. Myers, 11 W. Va. 276.

Rejection of Insensible Words. — In Gully v. Gully, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 20, it was held that the condition of a bond will be so construed, by rejecting insensible words, as to fulfil the intent of the parties. Hence, if a bond given upon obtaining an injunction be conditioned, "If the said R. [the complainant] should dissolve the injunction, and pay" the sum recovered at law and interest, the words "should dissolve the injunction, and" will be rejected as insensible.

6. Injunction to Restrain Collection of Judgment. — In Hardin v. White, 63 Iowa 633, it was held under Code Iowa (1873), §§ 3396, 3397 (Code 1897 §§ 4365, 4366), that where it is sought to restrain the collection of a judgment, the injunction bond must be for double the amount of the judgment; but this rule does not apply where it is sought only to restrain the sale of certain specific property under the execution issued upon the judgment.

that in the matter of ordinary preliminary injunctions the function of fixing the amount of the bond required rests in the sound discretion of the court.¹

Probable Injury from Injunction to Be Considered. — In fixing the amount of the bond the court should exercise a reasonable discretion and should take care in all cases that the bond is sufficient to cover the probable amount of damages which the defendant may sustain by reason of the injunction,² so as to insure with all practicable certainty that he may sustain no ultimate loss in case the injunction should be dissolved.³

j. INSERTION OF NAMES OF SURETIES. — According to the decisions, it would seem to be immaterial that the name of the surety should appear in the body of the injunction bond.⁴

k. MISRECITALS IN BOND — Effect of Misrecital of Order of Injunction. — A misrecital in an injunction bond of the order of injunction will not subject the surety to the payment of a judgment at law when it appears from the injunction itself that the collection of the judgment was not enjoined.⁵

Correction of Misrecital in Bond. — A misrecital in the condition of the bond as to the amount of the judgment enjoined may be corrected by the bill where the bond contains a plain reference to it, upon the principle that that is certain which can be made certain.⁶

l. FILING — Necessity for. — An injunction bond should be filed with the clerk after being approved.⁷

1. Amount Usually Discretionary with Court. — Bell v. Riggs, 37 La. Ann. 813; Green v. Huey, 23 La. Ann. 704; Billingslea v. Gilbert, 1 Bland (Md.) 566; Pratt v. Underwood, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 4 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 167; Gulick v. Heermans, 6 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 227.

Discretion Legal and Not Arbitrary. — Bell v. Riggs, 37 La. Ann. 813.

Presumption that Judge Fixed Amount of Bond. — Where the probate judge of a county allows a temporary injunction, but does not expressly state in his written order the amount of the undertaking to be given, but the undertaking which is given and accepted on the day of the allowance of the order recites upon its face that the injunction was granted on condition that the plaintiff give a bond to the defendant in the sum of five hundred dollars, it must be assumed, in the absence of any other showing, that the probate judge fixed the amount of the undertaking and that the bond was given and approved in pursuance of his order. State v. Eggleston, 34 Kan. 715.

When Order Fixing Penalty Unnecessary. — In Hurman v. Howe, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 676, it was held that where the injunction bond is executed in the presence of the court it is immaterial that the order for the injunction did not fix the penalty of the bond.

2. Probable Amount of Damages. — Loveland v. Burnham, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 65.

Plaintiff's Demand Not the Criterion. — Under the Pennsylvania Act of May 6, 1844 (P. L. 564), the amount of security to be given on the granting of an interlocutory injunction rests in the sound discretion of the court; the plaintiff's demand is not the criterion. Gulick v. Heermans, 6 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 227.

3. Drake v. Phillips, 40 Ill. 388; Lomax v. Picot, 2 Rand. (Va.) 247. See also Billingslea v. Gilbert, 1 Bland (Md.) 566.

Effect of Error in Fixing Penalty. — In Drake v. Phillips, 40 Ill. 388, the court after stating the rule as above set out, held that where the writ has been properly granted, the fact that the penalty in the bond is too small does not injure the party against whom the writ is allowed, and the decree will not be reversed for that reason.

Bond Not Void for Failure to Specify Amount — North Carolina. — North Carolina Gold Amalgamating Co. v. North Carolina Ore Dressing Co., 79 N. Car. 48.

4. Necessity for Inserting Names of Sureties. — Griffin v. Wallace, 66 Ind. 410, citing Potter v. State, 23 Ind. 550. In Hyatt v. Washington, 20 Ind. App. 148, the court said: "The names of the sureties do not appear in the body of the bond, but that is not material, as the court approved the bond when the restraining order was issued."

5. Misrecital of Order for Injunction. — Hord v. Trimble, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 414.

6. Correction of Misrecital. — Williamson v. Hall, 1 Ohio St. 190.

7. Filing of Bond. — Sheldon v. Allerton, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 700; O'Donnell v. McMurn, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 391. See also Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 Mich. 436.

Effect of Failure to File. — Where, on application for an injunction, an undertaking was presented to the judge and approved by him, and, after the granting of the injunction, was given by the plaintiff's attorney to his clerk to be filed, but the filing was omitted, it was held that the plaintiff should pay costs of a motion to vacate the injunction; and it might have been vacated, had the omission been designed. O'Donnell v. McMurn, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 391.

In Maryland it was held, in Burgess v. Lloyd, 7 Md. 178, that though the statute did not prescribe what should be done with the bond, it should be kept in the clerk's office, but need not be recorded.

In New Jersey it is the practice for the chancellor to direct that the bond, instead of being delivered to the defendant, shall be filed in the clerk's office, and it is considered as an escrow to be used by the clerk for the purpose of in-

Bond Operative from Time of Filing. — The bond is a perfect obligation as soon as filed.¹

Necessity for Proof of Execution. — According to some decisions, it is irregular for the plaintiff to file an injunction bond unless its execution has been duly proved or acknowledged.²

m. ORDER FOR DELIVERY OF BOND FOR PROSECUTION — Necessity for. — As has been stated, an injunction bond is a perfect obligation as soon as filed, and its delivery to the party entitled to the benefit thereof is dependent upon its breach,³ when it seems that an order is necessary directing the delivery of the bond to the proper party, in order that he may prosecute his action thereon.⁴

Rescission of Order. — Where an order has been made for the delivery of the bond to the obligees for prosecution it should be obeyed, and if this has been done and a suit has been instituted on the bond it would seem that such order, even though made without regard to the equities of the case, cannot be rescinded except for equities shown, and on equitable terms.⁵

n. SURETIES — (1) Necessity for. — The matter of injunction bonds being, as has been seen, entirely regulated by statute, the question as to the necessity of sureties on such bonds is to be determined by the wording of the statutes of the different states, which should be consulted.⁶

(2) Justification by Sureties. — The subject of justification by sureties, the necessity therefor, and the manner thereof, will be treated at length in a subsequent volume of this work.⁷

5. Rescission of Order. — Brown v. Easton, 30 N. J. Eq. 725.

6. New York — Principal's Undertaking Sufficient. — Under a rule of court it has been held that the officer granting an injunction may, under certain circumstances, dispense with sureties and allow the complainant to give his own bond, where, in the opinion of such officer, the personal responsibility of the complainant will afford ample protection to the defendant. Carroll v. Sand, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 298; Leavitt v. Dabney, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 613. See also New York, etc., R. Co. v. Dennis, 40 N. J. L. 345. In the case first cited it was said: "But where the officer allowing the injunction * * * is not satisfied with the sufficiency of the complainant's own bond, and thinks that one or more sureties should join in the same, he should require such sureties to justify in double the amount of the penalty of the bond which he may think necessary to cover the damage the defendant may sustain by reason of the injunction."

Requisites of Justification by Plaintiff. — It has been held that the plaintiff's own undertaking will not be received unless he will justify as being a freeholder or householder, and with double the sum specified over and above all his debts and liabilities. Leavitt v. Dabney, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 613; Sheldon v. Allerton, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 700, note.

7. See the title SURETYSHIP.

Necessity Where Sureties Are to Be Approved by Judge. — In one state it has been held that sureties who are to be approved by a judge must justify in all cases. Leavitt v. Dabney, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 613; Loveland v. Burnham, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 65; Sheldon v. Allerton, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 700; Carroll v. Sand, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 298. See also Dangel v. Levy, 1 Idaho 722.

What Justification Required. — In New York it has been held that a surety, when required, must justify in the same manner as the plaintiff when the latter's own undertaking is received, i. e., that he is a householder or freeholder, and worth double the sum specified, over and above all his debts and liabilities. Sheldon v. Allerton, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 700; Loveland v. Burnham, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 65.

Sureties Cannot Justify in Less Sum than the Penalty. — In Dangel v. Levy, 1 Idaho 722, it was held that under the Idaho statute a surety in a bond or undertaking for an injunction for two thousand dollars or less cannot justify in a sum less than that named as a penalty in the bond or undertaking.

Justification in Twenty Days. — In Carroll v. Sand, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 298, the court, in holding that the sureties to the bond must justify, said: "The provisions of the 172d rule are general, and apply to all cases in which an officer of the court is required to decide upon the sufficiency of sureties, either under a special order of the court, or by virtue of any of its general rules. The whole of this injunction must be set aside for irregularity, therefore, unless the sureties named in the bond in this case justify before the vice-chancellor within twenty days, or a new bond is filed

(3) Liability of Sureties — (a) When Attaches in Case of Signature in Blank. — Where a surety signs in blank an injunction bond which is afterwards properly filled up, his liability will attach from the time of his signature.¹

(b) Liability to Be Strictly Construed — aa. GENERAL RULE. — In the case of a surety on an injunction bond, the well-established principles of law as to the construction of the contracts of sureties generally apply, and such a bond is to be construed with the utmost strictness.²

bb. LIABILITY LIMITED BY EXPRESS TERMS OF BOND. — The surety on such bond cannot be held liable beyond the express terms of his undertaking.³

cc. MAY NOT BE VARIED BY STIPULATION OF PARTIES TO SUIT. — The liability of the sureties cannot be varied or extended by any stipulation of the parties to the injunction suit,⁴ as, for instance, by agreement of such parties that damages may be assessed for the first time in a suit upon the bond.⁵

with sureties who shall thus justify. And in case of such justification the injunction is still to be modified as before directed."

Undertaking Not Invalidated by Want of Affidavit. — In Lee v. Watson, 15 Mont. 228, it was held that the Montana Code of Civil Procedure imposes a duty upon the person who takes an injunction bond to require the sureties to accompany it with an affidavit of solvency, but if this duty is not performed and the affidavit is not secured, the undertaking is not therefore invalidated, but still holds, and the sureties are still liable, at least until the lack of verification is brought to the attention of the court or judge and action is taken thereon.

Justification Necessary When Sufficiency Excepted To. — Still another provision as to the justification of sureties is to the effect that when the sufficiency of sureties is excepted to, the plaintiff's sureties, upon notice to the defendant, must justify in the same manner as upon bail on arrest, and that upon failure to justify at the time and place appointed the order granting an injunction shall be dissolved. McSherry v. Pennsylvania Consol. Gold Min. Co., 97 Cal. 637.

Illustration. — Although the law requires that an injunction bond, where a judgment at law is enjoined, should be conditioned for the payment of the judgment, as well as the damages and costs, yet if a bond is in fact taken, securing damages and costs only, the securities are not bound for the judgment. Ashby v. Tureman, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 6.

The Surety Is Entitled to Stand on the Precise Terms of His Contract. — and there is no way of extending his liability beyond the stipulation to which he has chosen to bind himself. Tarpey v. Shillenberger, 10 Cal. 391; Webber v. Wilcox, 45 Cal. 301. See also Dunn v. Davis, 37 Ala. 95.

Not to Be Extended by Implication. — The liability of a surety is not to extend, by implication, beyond the terms of his contract. This understanding is to receive a strict interpretation, not to extend beyond the fair scope of its terms. U. S. v. Boyd, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 187.

Allowance over Sum Specified Error. — The limit of liability upon such an undertaking is the amount specified therein, and the court has no power to make any allowance beyond that amount for disbursements; an allowance for disbursements and reference fees over and above the sum specified in the undertaking is error. Lawton v. Green, 64 N. Y. 326.

Sureties Not Released by Stipulation Modifying Injunction. — The sureties on an injunction bond, in a suit to restrain a sheriff from paying over the proceeds of a sale of property on execution, are not released by a stipulation between the principal obligor and the execution creditors that the sheriff might retain the money until the determination of a motion in the case for the appointment of a receiver. Keith v. Henkleman, 173 Ill. 137.

5. In Mix v. Vail, 86 Ill. 40, where an injunction was dissolved in vacation and the bill

dd. PAROL EVIDENCE INADMISSIBLE TO CONTRADICT OR VARY TERMS. — Parol evidence is inadmissible to add to, contradict, or vary the contract of a surety, as to any of its terms.¹

(c) No Liability Beyond Statutory Requirements. — Where the conditions of an injunction bond are prescribed by statute² the surety thereon will not be liable beyond the statutory requirements,³ although the conditions may be broader and express.⁴

(d) Extent of Liability for Damages and Costs — Damages Limited to Those Caused by Injunction. — There is no liability on the part of the obligors in the bond for other damages and costs than those caused by the injunction.⁵

Liability as Dependent upon Award. — In some jurisdictions the rule is established that even within the limits above stated, the liabilities of the obligors upon a statutory injunction bond extend to such damages only as the court shall award against them upon the dissolution of the injunction.⁶ The nonpayment of the amount adjudged forms the breach of the bond, so far as damages are concerned,⁷ and until there has been an adjudication of damages no cause of action can be maintained on the bond.⁸

Liability for Counsel Fees. — The surety may be held liable for counsel fees as part of the damages, but the recovery in such cases is limited to the fees for services rendered in procuring the dissolution of the injunction, and does not extend to all the services rendered in the suit in which the injunction was sued out.⁹

(e) Sureties' Liability After Death of Principal — Liability for Satisfaction of Decree Against Principal. — The sureties in an injunction bond, in the usual form, are not only bound for the performance of any final decree that may be rendered against their principal, but where he dies before final hearing, and the case is revived in the name of his administrator, they are bound for the satisfaction of the decree rendered against him.¹⁰

was dismissed under a stipulation that the dismissal and an appeal which was taken should in nowise affect the right of the defendants to have their damages assessed for wrongfully suing out the injunction, in case of affirmance, and the final decree gave to the defendants leave to file a suggestion of damages within ten days, it was held that this did not dispense with the necessity of having the damages assessed in the chancery suit, and authorized them to be assessed in a suit upon the injunction bond.

8. Adjudication of Damages. — Dorriss v. Car- ter, 67 Mo. 544. See also Blakeney v. Ferguson, 18 Ark. 347; Brownfield v. Brownfield, 58 Ill. 152; McWilliams v. Morgan, 70 Ill. 551.

In Brownfield v. Brownfield, 58 Ill. 152, the condition of the bond provided for the payment of "all such costs and damages as shall be awarded against the complainants in case this injunction be dissolved." It was held that there could be no recovery upon the bond except for such damages as may have been awarded by the chancellor on the dissolution of the injunction.

In Ashby v. Chambers, 3 Dana (Ky.) 437, the condition of the bond was that the complainant should prosecute with effect or "pay such costs and damages as shall be awarded." In an action on the bond, the declaration averred that the suit was tried, the bill dismissed, and the plaintiff enjoined from taking possession of his land, which defendant had ever since enjoyed, and received the issues and profits thereof. It was held that this declaration showed no cause of action, as the defendant undertook to pay such damages only as should be awarded, and it did not appear that the damages had been in any way awarded.

9. Fees Incurred in Dissolving Injunction. — Bolling v. Tate, 65 Ala. 417, 39 Am. Rep. 5. As to the assessment of counsel fees as a part of the damages upon the dissolution of an injunction, see infra, this section, Recovery of Counsel Fees on Dissolution of Injunction.

10. Liability as Affected by Death of Principal. — Fowler v. Scott, 11 Ark. 675.

for costs accruing in the injunction suit after the death of their principal, as well as before.¹

(f) Liability for Damages Accruing After Injunction Made Permanent. — Since as a general rule no undertaking can be required upon a final decree,² and the function of the preliminary injunction ceases when the final decree is made,³ it would seem that damages accruing after the temporary injunction is made permanent cannot be recovered from the sureties if the final decree be reversed on appeal.⁴

(g) Liability for Damages Pending Appeal After Dissolution. — It has been held that a bond conditioned to pay damages accruing by reason of the wrongful suing out of the injunction can be held to cover the damages only up to the dissolution of the injunction, and cannot be held to cover any damages which accrue by reason of wrongfully continuing the injunction in force by means of an appeal bond.⁵ In case of such an appeal and continuance of the injunction, resort must be had to the appeal bond for the recovery of such damages.⁶ In Maryland, however, it has been held that the injunction bond is liable for the damages accruing to the defendant in the injunction proceedings by reason of the delay and obstruction of his rights during the pendency of the appeal, and the appeal bond is held to be only cumulative security except as to the costs on the appeal, for which it alone is answerable.⁷

(h) Operation of Bond as Estoppel on Sureties — General Rule. — The usual rule is that a surety is estopped to deny the recitals of an injunction bond to the terms of which he has agreed.⁸

Estoppel to Deny Pendency of Suit. — In an action on a bond given to restrain the further prosecution of a suit at law the defendants are estopped from denying that there was such a suit pending as that described in the bond.⁹

Estoppel to Deny Issuance of Injunction. — The sureties are estopped from denying that the injunction recited in the bond was granted and ordered.¹⁰

Estoppel to Deny Existence of Judgment Recited. — In an action on a bond to stay proceedings on a judgment, the obligors are estopped to deny that there was such a judgment as that which the bond recites had been enjoined.¹¹

Estoppel to Deny that Order Required Bond. — When the bond recites that the issu-

Undertaking Coextensive in Point of Time with Order. — If the plaintiff in an action to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the commission of trespasses obtains a preliminary injunction at the time of commencing suit, and on the trial it is made perpetual, and the judgment is afterwards reversed and the action dismissed, the sureties are not liable for any damages accruing after the entry of the decree making the injunction perpetual. Webber v. Wilcox, 45 Cal. 301.

5. Damages Pending Appeal from Decree of Dissolution. — Rees v. Peltzer, 1 Ill. App. 315. See also Woodson v. Johns, 3 Munf. (Va.) 230, holding that the security in a bond for the prosecution of an injunction is not liable for the costs and damages which may accrue on an appeal to a superior court.

6. Resorting to Appeal Bond for Damages. — Rees v. Peltzer, 1 Ill. App. 315.

7. Appeal Bond Cumulative Security. — Hamilton v. State, 32 Md. 348, the court saying: "It was not until the order of dissolution was affirmed by the Court of Appeals that the liability of the injunction bond became fixed; and though the appeal bond was continued to prosecute the appeal with effect, and by breach of which the appellee became entitled to recover for damages sustained by reason of the appeal, it is but cumulative security to the injunction bond, except as to the costs on the appeal, to which the appeal bond alone is chargeable."

8. Surety Estopped to Deny Recitals of Bond. — Person v. Thornton, 86 Ala. 308; Fowler v. Scott, 11 Ark. 675; Hardey v. Coe, 5 Gill (Md.) 189; Le Strange v. State, 58 Md. 26; *Burgess v. 11. Estoppel to Deny Existence of Judgment. Northwestern Bank v. Fleshman, 22 W. Va. 317. In this case the court, after laying down the rule as to estoppel by recitals in a bond, said: "So parties are estopped from denying that there was such an injunction awarded or judgment or decree rendered as their bonds recite." See Allen v. Luckett, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 165; Kellar v. Beeler, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 655; Stockton v. Turner, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 192. See also Hardey v. Coe, 5 Gill (Md.) 189.

ance of the injunction was ordered "on the complainant's filing, etc., a bond executed by himself and a surety or sureties," etc., the surety, in an action against himself on the bond, is estopped from denying that the order granting the injunction required a bond.¹

Estoppel to Plead that Order Was Broader than Application. — The parties to the bond are estopped from asserting as a defense in a suit on the bond that the order was broader than the application therefor.²

(4) Sureties Bound by Decree in Injunction Suit. — It May Be Stated as a General Rule that the sureties cannot go behind the decree in the case in which their bond was given.³

Cannot Assail Agreement on Which Decree Founded. — Thus in an action on the bond for damages they cannot go behind a decree dissolving the injunction, and assail the validity of the agreement upon which the decree was founded.⁴

(5) Right of Surety to Appeal from Judgment in Injunction Suit. — In the absence of statute it may be laid down as a general rule that the sureties in the bond are not parties to the judgment in the original suit, and therefore have no right to appeal from such judgment.⁵

o. ACTION ON BOND — (1) Right of Action — (a) Merger of Common-law Remedy. — According to the weight of authority it would seem that the common-law remedy in the nature of an action on the case for injuries arising from an injunction is not merged in the statutory remedy on the injunction bond,⁶ but the defendant may resort to an action on the case for malicious prosecution wherever there is malice or want of probable cause, since in such case the party abusing the process is considered as a co-trespasser.⁷ If, however, no abuse of the process through malice and without probable cause appears, the only remedy of the injured party is an action upon the injunction bond.⁸

5. Right of Appeal. — St. Louis Zinc Co. v. Hesselmeier, 50 Mo. 180.

Sureties Become Parties in Case of Proceedings to Assess Damages. — If a proceeding be had upon the injunction bond, by motion or otherwise, against the sureties to assess damages, then they become parties and may appeal from such judgment. But until this occurs they have no such interest as to authorize them to carry on the original suit by appeal or otherwise. St. Louis Zinc Co. v. Hesselmeier, 50 Mo. 180. See also Nolan v. Johns, 108 Mo. 431.

Right to Appeal from Order Confirming Referee's Report. — In New York, where an order directing a reference to ascertain the damages sustained by the defendant in consequence of the issuing of an injunction requires that five days' notice of the hearing be given to the sureties upon the undertaking (which in the case at bar was not signed by the plaintiff), and the sureties appear before the referee and oppose the confirmation of the report at special term, they are entitled to maintain an appeal to the general term from the order confirming the report of the referee, although they are not parties to the action. Hotchkiss v. Platt, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 56. See also Methodist Churches v. Barker, 18 N. Y. 463.

(b) Necessity for Actual Issuance of Injunction — No Cause of Action Where No Writ Issues. — Until the writ is obtained and the party is actually restrained by it, the bond is held to be inoperative, and there can be no breach of the condition and therefore no right of action on the bond.¹

Agreement in Place of Writ. — Thus, where an order is passed directing an injunction to restrain further proceedings, but no writ issues, but by agreement of parties the suit is entered "enjoined," and regarded and treated as if the writ had issued, the proper remedy for the obligee for any damages sustained by him by reason of the restraint is on the agreement, and not on the injunction bond.²

Recovery by Defendant Who Has Obeyed Injunction though Not Served. — It has been held that a defendant who obeys an injunction though never served therewith is entitled after judgment in his favor to claim the damages provided for in the undertaking to procure such injunction.³

(c) Necessity for Final Decree — aa. GENERAL RULE — Must Be Final Decree in Suit. — As to the time when the right of action accrues on an injunction bond, the weight of authority is clearly to the effect that no action can be maintained upon a bond as ordinarily conditioned until there has been a final decree in the suit in which the injunction was obtained and the bond executed;⁴ and that such right of action does not accrue immediately upon the dissolution of

App. 173; Garner v. Strode, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 314. See, however, the dissenting opinion of Cooper, J., in Baxter v. Washburn, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 21.

Record Must Show that Injunction Was Ordered or Issued. — Where the record fails to show that an injunction was ordered or issued a judgment for damages on its dissolution cannot be sustained. Ridgley v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co., 61 Ill. App. 173.

Effect of Prior Issuance of Writ. — In Carter v. Mulrein, 82 Cal. 167, 16 Am. St. Rep. 99, it was held that when a bond is given in pursuance of an order that an injunction issue upon the filing of the bond, the sureties are not liable for damages arising to the defendant from his obedience to a writ of injunction issued several days prior to the date of the bond, no writ having issued after the filing of the undertaking.

Effect of Order Preventing Enforcement. — In Hyde v. Teal, 46 La. Ann. 645, it was held that the defendant was not entitled to reconventional damages where immediately after the order of injunction was granted an order was issued to prevent its enforcement.

Obedience to Ambiguous Writ. — A person who has secured an injunction which is ambiguous in its terms cannot object to its obedience on the part of the defendants, or to their claim for recompense for the damage they have sustained thereby. His acquiescence in their obedience must be accepted as his own construction of the manner in which he intended it to be obeyed, and his bondsmen are liable upon their bond for the damages consequent thereon. Asevado v. Orr, 100 Cal. 293.

2. Agreement to Enter Suit as Enjoined. — Eakle v. Smith, 27 Md. 467. See also Freeman v. Adams, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 115.

Injunction Ordered but Not Complied With. — In M'Coun v. Delany, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 440, it was held that where an injunction was ordered upon a condition which was not complied with, the injunction was not effectual to delay the party, and it was erroneous to decree damages upon a dissolution of the injunction.

the injunction, but accrues only after the final determination of the action in which the injunction was obtained.¹

Right of Action on Bare Dissolution. — Although the well-settled rule is as stated, cases which apparently hold that an action may be maintained upon the bare dissolution of the injunction and without awaiting a final decree are not wanting, though the decisions seem to have been based upon the peculiar wording of the bonds in such cases.²

Signature and Filing of Formal Decree Unnecessary. — In Thurston v. Haskell, 81 Me. 303, it was held that an action may be maintained on the bond after an entry has been made in a docket dismissing the bill on its merits, without awaiting the signing and filing of a formal decree.

Dissolution for Want of Bond Insufficient. — The dissolution of an existing injunction for want of a proper bond, followed by an immediate order for a new injunction upon the filing of a new bond, and such bond being filed, is not such a dissolution as is contemplated by the statute in regard to damages. Beauchamp v. Kankakee County, 45 Ill. 274.

Void Order of Dissolution Gives No Cause of Action. — Alexander v. Gish, (Ky. 1891) 17 S. W. Rep. 287.

No Right of Action Where Injunction Reinstated. — Bentley v. Joslin, Hempst. (U. S.) 218.

When Statute of Limitations Begins to Run Against Surety's Administrator. — In Pickett v. Boyd, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 498, it was held that the statute of limitations did not begin to run in favor of an administrator of a surety until the injunction was dissolved and the action in which it was granted was determined, since the right of action did not accrue until that time.

2. Right of Action on Dissolution Dependent on Wording of Bond. — Sizer v. Anthony, 22 Ark. 465; Tallahassee R. Co. v. Hayward, 4 Fla. 411; Boden v. Dill, 58 Ind. 273; Harrison v. Balfour, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 301; Somerville

bb. ACCRUAL OF RIGHT ON DISCONTINUANCE OR DISMISSAL — Order of Discontinuance Final Determination. — An order discontinuing an action in which an injunction has been issued, upon the motion of the plaintiff, which motion was opposed by the defendant, is equivalent to a final determination that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction¹ for the purposes of the relief founded upon the undertaking given when the injunction was procured.²

Accrual of Right on Dismissal of Suit — In General. — The dismissal of a suit in which an injunction has been issued amounts to a determination that the injunction has been improperly granted, and a right of action immediately accrues to the defendant.³ A dismissal for want of prosecution operates as a final adjudication and gives a right of action on the bond;⁴ and the same is

v. Mayes, 54 Miss. 31. See also Stone v. Cason, 1 Oregon 100.

Where a bond to secure an injunction provides for the payment "of all damages and costs" sustained by the obligee by reason of such injunction "should the same be wrongful," it contains but one condition, namely, that the injunction shall be wrongful, and such undertaking becomes absolute when the injunction is shown to be wrongful and is dissolved. Boden v. Dill, 58 Ind. 273.

1. Right of Action Accrues on Discontinuance. — Manning v. Cassidy, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 127; New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Hastings-on-Hudson, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 256; *Pacific Mail Steamship Co. v. 2. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Hastings-on-Hudson, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 256; Manning v. Cassidy, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 127.

Discontinuance or Dismissal by Stipulation Insufficient. — The discontinuance of the action by an amicable and voluntary agreement of the parties, unlike a voluntary dismissal by the plaintiff of his own motion in consequence or in view of an adverse interlocutory decision of the court, is not such a final decision adverse to the plaintiff as to fix liability on the injunction bond. Palmer v. Foley, 71 N. Y. 106, which case was cited in Manufacturers, etc., Bank v. C. W. F. Dare Co., 67 Hun (N. Y.) 44, and distinguished in Amberg v. Kramer, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 8 N. Y. Supp. 821. See also Large v. Steer, 121 Pa. St. 30, in which case the court said that as a general rule the dismissal of a bill by the agreement of the parties is not the equivalent of a decision upon the merits, citing New York, etc., R. Co. v. Omerod, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 274; Palmer v. Foley, 71 N. Y. 106; Towle v. Leacox, 59 Iowa 42; Neugent v. Swan, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 40. The court continued: "That this must be the rule as regards the sureties in an injunction bond can hardly be doubted. Were it otherwise, their liability could be fixed by the agreement of the parties, without their assent, or even their knowledge, instead of by the judgment or decree of the court, as contemplated and tacitly understood when they signed the bond."

No Defense that Injunction Was Obtained in Subsequent Suit. — In an action on the bond, brought upon the dismissal of an action for injunction, it is no defense that in a subsequent action seeking the same relief the defendant obtained a decree perpetually enjoining the defendant. Swan v. Timmons, 81 Ind. 243. See also Weaver v. Poyer, 73 Ill. 489.

Referee's Report Not Final Decision. — Where a referee makes a report dismissing the complaint with costs, until a judgment has been entered upon such report so that the decision of the referee becomes the judgment of the court there is no final decision that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction, and the defendant is not entitled to a reference to ascertain the damages. Weeks v. Southwick, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 170, citing Dunkin v. Lawrence, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 447.

4. Failure to Prosecute. — Zeigler v. David, the case when the dismissal is based on the failure of the complaint to state a cause of action.¹ So the voluntary dismissal by the plaintiff of the action in which the injunction was issued will have the same effect as a decision of the court that he was not entitled to the injunction.²

(d) Accrual of Right on Partial Dissolution. — The partial dissolution of an injunction by a final decree is such a breach of the obligation of the bond as to give to the obligee a right of action thereon.³ The justice of this rule is especially apparent in the case of injunctions against judgments, since otherwise the obligee might often be left without security for the greater part of his debt which both equity and law have adjudged to be justly due to him.⁴

(e) Right of Action on Dissolution of Injunction Against Judgment — Right to Sue on Bond Without Enforcing Judgment. — Where a bond given to secure an injunction against a judgment is conditioned to pay all money and costs due or to become due to the plaintiff in the action at law, and also all such costs and damages as may be awarded in case the injunction is dissolved, the dissolution of the injunction is the contingency on the happening of which the bond is forfeited, and the right of action is then complete;⁵ and the obligee in such case need not, before resorting to his remedy on the bond, pursue his remedy at law by the issuance of an execution upon the judgment.⁶

Dismissal Without Prejudice to Future Action.

— Where a plaintiff, on commencing a suit and obtaining a temporary injunction, gives an undertaking to secure to the party injured the damages which he may sustain if it be finally decided that the injunction ought not to have been granted, and subsequently appears in court and dismisses the action without prejudice to a future action, and the court enters judgment dismissing the action, such judgment is equivalent to a final decision by the court that the plaintiff was not entitled to the temporary order of injunction, and after the judgment an action lies upon the undertaking. Mitchell v. Sullivan, 30 Kan. 231;

Yale v. Baum, 70 Miss. 225.

"If the Injunction Was Wrongfully Issued as to Any Part of Plaintiff's Demand, and it is partially dissolved to that extent, he will be entitled to such damages within the limit of the penalty of the bond as he may have sustained by reason of the issuing of the injunction." Rice v. Cook, 92 Cal. 144.

Effect of Order of Court on Stipulation for Modification. — Where, after the execution of the bond and the issuance of the injunction, the parties to the suit stipulate that the injunction shall be modified, and thereafter the injunction, as modified, is dissolved, a right of action accrues upon the bond, and the modification of the injunction by stipulation does not have the effect to relieve the sureties from their liability. Brackebush v. Dorsett, 37 Ill. App. 581, citing Boynton v. Phelps, 52 Ill. 210, and Towle v. Towle, 46 N. H. 431.

also Hunt v. Scobie, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 469.

6. Issuance of Execution Unnecessary. — Harrison v. Balfour, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 301.

Effect of Issuance of Execution, and Execution and Forfeiture of Forthcoming Bond. — In Harrison v. Balfour, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 301, it was held that after the dissolution of an injunction against a judgment at law, and action brought on the injunction bond, the issuance of an execution and the execution and forfeiture of a forthcoming bond will not bar the action on the injunction bond.

Right Barred by Taking Debtor's Body in Execution. — See Porteous v. Snipes, 1 Bay (S. Car.) 215.

(2) Defenses to Action on Bond — (a) General Rule as to Merits of Injunction Suit — Merits May Not Be Inquired Into. — It may be laid down as a universally accepted rule that the grounds of an injunction may not be inquired into in an action upon the injunction bond. It is for the court to determine whether the injunction was properly or improperly issued, and the defendants in the action on the bond are concluded by the determination of the court on this point.¹

(b) Solvency of Principal. — In an action on the bond against the sureties therein it is no defense that the principal is solvent and able to pay his own debts.²

(c) Want of Jurisdiction. — The fact that the court issuing the injunction had no jurisdiction is no defense to an action on the bond.³

Reason for Rule. — The rule is a proper application of the doctrine of estoppel and is based upon the theory that it does not lie in the mouth of one who has affirmed the jurisdiction of a court in a particular matter, to accomplish a purpose, afterwards to deny such jurisdiction to escape a penalty.⁴

(d) Disobedience to Writ. — It may be laid down as a general rule that while by disobedience to a writ of injunction the party enjoined becomes amenable to the action of the court as for contempt,⁵ such disobedience does not deprive him of his right of action for a breach of the conditions of the injunction bond, and is no defense to such an action.⁶

(e) Issuance of Second Injunction. — It has been held that in a suit on a bond given to secure the injunction of a judgment it is no defense to show that immediately after the dissolution of the injunction in respect to which the bond was given another injunction was obtained against the collection of the same judgment, and that such injunction is still in force and not dissolved.⁷ It seems, however, that in such a case where the judgment was unjust and wrongful equity will give relief and restrain the exercise of the obligor's strictly legal right.⁸

Evidence in Mitigation of Damages — Dissolution Prima Facie Evidence of Improper Issuance. — In Stewart v. Miller, 1 Mont. 301, it was held that "where the dissolution of an injunction is not consequent upon a final determination or adjudication upon the merits of the action, the obligors in the bond may, according to the weight of authority and principle, show the facts and circumstances entitling them to the injunction, if not in full defense, at least in mitigation of damages in an action upon the bond, the order of dissolution being in such cases only prima facie evidence that the injunction was improperly issued."

2. Solvency of Principal No Defense. — Hunt v. Burton, 18 Ark. 188. See also Dangel v. Levy, 1 Idaho 722.

In Riggan v. Crain, 86 Ky. 249, which was an action on a bond given to secure the injunction of an execution, it was held that it is immaterial whether the property released from levy was subject to the execution, or whether the plaintiff has lost his debt by reason of the injunction. Where there is no question as to the execution of the bond, the only inquiry is Did the chancellor dissolve the injunction?

(f) Reversal of Judgment Enjoined. — Where a bond has been given to secure an injunction against the collection of a judgment, conditioned for the payment of the judgment in case of the dissolution of the injunction, it would seem that the reversal of the judgment at law before the suit on the bond has been brought will be a good defense to such action.¹

(3) Evidence in Action on Bond — Extracts from Record. — In an action on an injunction bond it seems that extracts from the decrees and orders in the injunction cause are competent and sufficient evidence of the dissolution of the injunction, and it is unnecessary to produce the entire record.²

Agreement to Offer Original Papers — Admission of Petition for Taking of Proof. — Where by agreement of counsel in an action on the bond the original papers in the injunction case are to be offered, subject to exception, in place of the exemplification of the record of that case, all the original papers in the injunction suit are clearly admissible as constituting the record,³ and it is no error to admit in evidence a petition filed in the injunction case for the taking of proof, since such petition constitutes part of the record.⁴

Evidence that Injunction Prevented Collecting Judgment by Execution. — In an action on a bond to secure an injunction against a judgment where the plaintiff contends that he could have made the money on his judgment by execution on certain lands which were mortgaged pending the injunction, evidence of such fact is admissible.⁵

2. Damages — a. MANNER OF ASSESSING — (1) At Common Law — Prevailing Rule. — As regards the assessment and award of damages on the dissolution of an injunction, the decisions are not entirely uniform. According to the weight of authority, the rights and liabilities of the parties under the bond are cognizable only in courts of law. The principal obligor and his sureties are entitled to have these rights determined under and according to the rules of practice of courts of law, and, aside from express statutory authorization, a court of equity, on dissolving the injunction, cannot assess and award damages except by the consent of the obligors expressed in the bond, or in some other appropriate mode.⁶ And it seems that where the plaintiff and his sureties undertake to abide by such order respecting damages as the court may make, the question of their liability may be submitted to the judgment of the common-law courts.⁷

On the Other Hand, it has been held at circuit, the court relying on a dictum of the United States Supreme Court, that a court of chancery has inherent power to assess damages upon the dissolution of an injunction, and that where the injunction has been dissolved, the sounder and safer rule is for the court to go on and assess the damages sustained by the party against whom the injunction issued.⁸ And in one of the state courts it was held that where a court diately filed a second bill for the same purpose, which was held sufficient, and in the meantime judgment was recovered on the injunction bond for the amount of such void judgment, it was held that, as it was inequitable to allow the collection of the void judgment, it was equally so to allow the plaintiff to enforce payment of the judgment on the bond, and collection thereof should be enjoined.

of chancery granting an injunction has made an order requiring the party asking the injunction to pay such damages as the party enjoined shall suffer by reason of the injunction, in case of its dissolution, or if a bond to secure such damages has been required and furnished, it is within the power of the chancery court, independently of the statutes or chancery rules, to ascertain the damages upon the dissolution of the injunction and to decree their payment by the party obtaining the injunction. It was said, however, that so far as the sureties were concerned the court could have no jurisdiction, and that to enforce the bond proceedings must be instituted at law upon the bond itself.¹

(2) Under Statutes — Right of Court to Assess on Dissolution. — In many of the states it is expressly provided by statute that after it has been adjudged that the party obtaining the injunction was not entitled thereto, the court may proceed to ascertain the damages² by reference or otherwise as it may see fit to direct;³ and in others there are provisions not quite so broad, but which authorize the assessment of damages upon the dissolution of an injunction against proceedings on a judgment or final order.⁴ In all other cases the damages can be ascertained only in an action on the injunction bond.¹

Evidence of Damages on Assessment — Necessity for. — Where damages are assessed by the court upon the dissolution of an injunction there must be evidence supporting such assessment.²

Record Must Show Evidence. — The record must show the evidence upon which the court assessed the damages,³ especially where there is no such finding of facts in the decree as will dispense with the necessity of preserving the evidence.⁴ There is no presumption in such cases to aid the omission of the evidence from the record.⁵

b. ASSESSMENT AS PREREQUISITE TO ACTION ON BOND — In Absence of Statute. — Where there is no statute authorizing the court to assess damages on the dissolution of an injunction, no assessment is necessary in order that the defendant may maintain an action on the bond for the damages sustained by him.⁶

Under Statute Authorizing Assessment. — In those states where the statutes provide for the assessment of damages upon the dissolution of the injunction the authorities are not uniform as to the necessity of such assessment. Thus it has been held that it is imperative that the damages should be so assessed,⁷ and some decisions expressly hold that where the obligation in a statutory bond is to pay such damages as the court shall upon the dissolution of the injunction adjudge against the plaintiff no action can be maintained on the bond without such assessment, since the nonpayment of the amount adjudged forms the breach of the bond so far as damages are concerned.⁸ Other deci-

No Application to Injunctions Against Sale of Particular Property. — The terms of Mansf. Dig. Stat. Ark., §§ 3763-3765 (Sand. & H. Dig. Stat. Ark. 1894, §§ 3810-3812), providing for the assessment of damages on the dissolution of an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment, apply only to cases where the enforcement of the judgment is enjoined. An injunction to prevent the sale of particular property is not within the meaning of the statute, and it is error to award damages on dissolving it. Stanley v. Bonham, 52 Ark. 354.

No Application in Case of Injunctions Restraining Trespass. — Upon the dissolution of an injunction to restrain the commission of a trespass, the court has no right to assess the damages accruing from the injunction. They must be recovered in another action if at all. Greer v. Stewart, 48 Ark. 21.

5. No Presumption to Aid Omission of Evidence. — Forth v. Xenia, 54 Ill. 210, the court saying: "We are not aware of any rule of law or equity requiring this court to presume that the Circuit Court heard evidence on rendering a decree. The rule has been often stated by this court that the facts on which a decree in equity is based must appear somewhere in the record." Citing Wilhite v. Pearce, 47 Ill. 413; Pankey v. Raum, 51 Ill. 88.

In Claytor v. Anthony, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 518, it was held that though the condition of the bond provides for the payment of such damages as may be awarded by the court, and the court simply dissolves the injunction and dismisses the bill, yet the order of dissolution necessarily imports that the damages are to be paid, unless they are expressly remitted by the terms of the order.

sions, however, hold that although it is provided that the court may assess the damages on dissolution of an injunction, this fact will not prevent the defendant from recovering damages on the bond without such assessment.¹

c. EFFECT OF ASSESSMENT. — Where the court assesses the amount of damages upon the dissolution of an injunction this is conclusive upon both the party and his sureties.²

d. RIGHT OF COURT DISSOLVING INJUNCTION TO ENFORCE PAYMENT —

(1) Rendition of Judgment Against Principal. — As to whether the power of the court upon the dissolution of an injunction ends with the mere ascertainment of the amount of damages to be allowed to the defendant, the practice differs in the various states. Thus in some states it is provided that judgment shall be rendered against the party who obtained the injunction for the damages assessed, and such assessment shall be conclusive against the surety of such party,³ though the court has no jurisdiction to render judgment for damages against the sureties in the injunction bond.⁴

(2) Rendition of Judgment Against Principal and Sureties. — In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the sureties on an injunction bond are so far parties that judgment may be rendered against them together with the principal to pay the amount adjudged against the latter;⁵ and in one jurisdiction the decisions hold that the payment of damages ascertained by reference may be enforced by order of court and by execution against all the obligors, pro-

1. Illinois — Prior to the Act of 1861 it was held that the conditions of an injunction bond, in reference to damages, authorized a recovery thereon whether the damages were awarded on the dissolution of the injunction or afterwards, in a suit on the bond. Hibbard v. McKindley, 28 Ill. 240.

Under the Act of 1861, authorizing the chancellor on the dissolution of an injunction to assess damages upon the filing of suggestions in writing, it was held that where a bond has been given conditioned to pay such damages as may be awarded to the plaintiff, the condition is intended to refer to the awarding of damages by the chancellor, and that where damages have not been awarded no suit can be maintained on the bond. Russell v. Rogers, 56 Ill. 176, in which case the court pointed out that Hibbard v. McKindley, 28 Ill. 240, was decided before the enactment of the statute. See also McWilliams v. Morgan, 70 Ill. 551; Brownfield v. Brownfield, 58 Ill. 152; Mix v. Vail, 86 Ill. 40.

Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 580, § 12 (Starr & Curt. Annot. Stat. 1896, c. 69, par. 12), contains a proviso that the failure of the court to assess damages shall not operate as a bar to an action upon the injunction bond; but this statute has been held not to affect the right to maintain an action on a bond which was executed before the statute became operative. Mix v. Vail, 86 Ill. 40. See also Marthaler v. Druiding, 58 Ill. App. 336; Linington v. Strong, 8 Ill. App. 388.

Reference and Report Conclusive on Sureties when Confirmed by Court. — A reference and report upon the damages sustained by reason of the injunction, and a confirmation by the court, are conclusive in an action against the sureties, although they were not parties to the reference, and not notified of the proceedings. Methodist Churches v. Barker, 18 N. Y. 463.

No Reversal for Such Error on Appeal of Principal Alone. — In Daniel v. Daniel, 39 Ark. 266, it was held that while it is error, upon the dissolution of an injunction, to render judgment against the sureties in the injunction bond, the judgment will not be reversed upon the appeal of the principal alone. See also Mann v. State, 37 Ark. 405.

5. Judgment Against Sureties. — Howell v. Cronan, 31 La. Ann. 247; Garcia v. Avery, 22 La. Ann. 417; Nolan v. Johns, 108 Mo. 431; St. Louis Zinc Co. v. Hesselmeyer, 50 Mo. 180. See also Sharp v. Schmidt, 62 Tex. 263.

Surety a Party Only Where Execution of Judgments Enjoined. — In Scott v. Sheriff, 30 La. Ann. 580, it was said: "It is only in those cases in which the execution of a judgment is enjoined that, on the trial of the injunction, the sureties on the bond are by law considered as parties to the suit. In all others the successful defendant is left to his action on the bond."

Against One or Both. — In Nansemond Timber Co. v. Rountree, 122 N. Car. 45, it was held that the damages must be assessed against the plaintiff and its sureties, or either one of them. See also Crawford v. Pearson, 116 N. Car. 718.

vided all have been notified of the reference, and thus made parties to the proceedings.¹

e. ENFORCEMENT BY ACTION ON BOND. — In the absence of statutes such as have just been considered, the order of the court upon dissolving an injunction should be confined to fixing the amount of damages, the payment of which can be enforced only by action on the undertaking.²

f. MEASURE OF DAMAGES — (1) Only Proximate Damages Recoverable — (a) General Rule. — It may be laid down as a general rule that upon the dissolution of an injunction nothing can be included in the damages which is not the actual natural and proximate result of the injunction.³

Loss of Property or Diminution of Profits. — Any loss of property or diminution of profits occurring in consequence of the change in the custody and control of the defendant's goods or stoppage of his business is held to be such proximate result of the injunction as may be recovered as damages.⁴

Remote or Speculative Damages Not Recoverable. — The defendant cannot recover damages which are remote, consequential, or speculative.⁵

Sureties Not Liable for Tortious Taking and Conversion by Complainant. — The sureties in an injunction bond are not liable for wrongs suffered by the defendant during the time when the injunction was in force, by unlawful acts of the complainant, other than the improvident act of suing out the writ. They are not liable for the tortious acts of the complainant in taking and converting the property during the pendency of the injunction. Cummings v. Mugge, 94 Ill. 186.

(b) Necessity for Exercise of Care and Prudence by Defendant. — According to some decisions damages recoverable for injuries occasioned from an injunction obtained in good faith are such only as result from injuries received while the defendant is exercising ordinary care and prudence.¹

(c) Recovery of Damages on Partial Dissolution. — If an injunction is wrongfully issued as to any part of the plaintiff's demand, and is partially dissolved to that extent, the party enjoined will be entitled to such damages within the limit of the penalty of the bond as he may have sustained by reason of the issuing of the injunction.²

(d) Recovery of Exemplary Damages. — It would seem according to some decisions that exemplary damages are not recoverable even where an injunction has been maliciously sued out.³ According to decisions in other jurisdictions, however, the court may mulct in exemplary damages those who abuse the equitable remedy of injunction.⁴

(2) Amount of Recovery Limited by Bond. — Where an injunction bond is required and given, and there is no evidence of the character and extent of the order as to securing the damages outside the terms of the bond, it has been held that the court of chancery cannot, upon dissolution of the injunction, award damages in excess of the penalty of the bond.⁵ Other decisions,

See generally the title DAMAGES, vol. 8, p. 537.

Loss of Possible Profits. — A horse-railway company was enjoined from extending its track to a certain point; the injunction being dissolved, the company claimed damages from a loss of profits that might have been realized from increase of business after the extension. It appeared that the company had another line, parallel with the extension and near it, and that no accounts were kept of the profits as to the extension, the fare being five cents for any distance. It was held that no damages could be assessed for such profits, they being speculative and too remote and uncertain. Chicago City R. Co. v. Howison, 86 Ill. 215. See also, as to loss of possible profits being too speculative to allow of recovery therefor, Lehman v. McQuown, 31 Fed. Rep. 138; Manufacturers, etc., Bank v. C. W. F. Dare Co., 67 Hun (N. Damages Arising from Acts of Receiver. — When an injunction is ended by the appointment of a receiver, damages arising from the act of the receiver in selling at a sacrifice the property the sale of which was enjoined are not recoverable in an action on the injunction bond. Kerngood v. Gusdorf, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 161.

Want of Diligence in Securing Other Employment. — In Muller v. Fern, 35 Iowa 420, it was held that in an action on an injunction bond the plaintiffs are entitled to recover, at the usual rate of wages, for the loss of time occasioned by the injunction, provided they used diligence to secure other employment during such period. In the absence of all evidence that the plaintiffs used such diligence a judgment in their favor should be reversed.

Negligence in Protecting Property from Injury.

— The defendant having a lot of unburned brick which were damaged by rain while an injunction was in force, restraining him from carrying on the manufacture of such brick on the premises, it was held that the writ of injunction as issued did not prevent him from taking steps to protect the brick from the rain, and if he was negligent in that respect he could not recover for damages sustained thereby. Behrens v. McKenzie, 23 Iowa 333, 92 Am. Dec. 428.

Entitled to Loss from Obedience to Injunction as Reasonably Understood. — A defendant who has been wrongfully enjoined may recover as damages whatever loss he has sustained by reason of obeying the injunction as he reasonably understood it. Webb v. Laird, 62 Vt. 448, 22 Am. St. Rep. 121.

2. Damages Recoverable on Partial Dissolution. — Rice v. Cook, 92 Cal. 144.

3. View that Exemplary Damages Are Not Recoverable. — See Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47. See also Shackelford County v. Hounsfield, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. Rep. 358.

4. View that Exemplary Damages May Be Recoverable. — Walker v. Villavaso, 23 La. Ann. 800; Pendleton v. Eaton, 23 La. Ann. 435. In the latter case it was held that an act of sale of personal property, consisting of goods, wares, and merchandise in a store, in block, without fixing a price and without delivery, is null as against a seizing creditor, and a third party who claims to have purchased such goods before the seizure, and who resorts to the equitable remedy of injunction to stay the sale thereof on the ground of ownership in himself under his purchase, will be condemned to pay the highest rate of exemplary damages for his abuse of the equitable remedies which are given by the law to enable parties to protect themselves against unjust attacks.

5. Limit of Recovery. — Sturgis v. Knapp, 33 Vt. 486. See also Rhea v. McCorkle, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 415.

Limiting Recovery to Penalty Named in Bond. — In Selectmen v. McGaffey, 56 Vt. 294, it was however, hold that the recovery against a principal and surety in a bond for the payment of money is not limited to the penalty, but may exceed it so far as necessary to include interest from the time of the breach.¹

(3) Discretion of Court as to Amount. — Where by statute discretionary power to award damages not to exceed a certain per cent. is given to a court, if it awards a much less sum than the maximum authorized such exercise of discretion will not be controlled by the Supreme Court.²

(4) Damages on Dissolution of Injunction Against Judgments. — Upon the dissolution of an injunction on a judgment, the damages for retarding execution by the injunction should be computed on the aggregate of principal, interest, and costs appearing due on the judgment at the time when the injunction took effect;³ and the defendant is entitled to damages on so much of his judgment only as remains due, and the collection of which has been delayed by the injunction.⁴

Assessment of Percentage of Judgment Enjoined — In General. — Statutory provisions exist in some of the states to the effect that where an injunction to stay the collection of a money judgment is dissolved wholly or in part, damages at a certain percentage shall be assessed on the amount of such judgment.⁵ Such provisions apply not only where the judgment debtor arrests the proceedings, held that on the dissolution of an injunction granted on condition that a bond of a specified amount be filed, the bond having been filed, with no other order as to payment of damages which might result from granting the injunction, the defendant can recover no greater amount than the penalty of the bond. If the injunction had issued conditioned that the orators pay all the damages sustained, the case might merit a different conclusion.

3. On What Amount Computed. — Washington v. Parks, 6 Leigh (Va.) 581.

4. Southerland v. Crawford, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 369.

On Partial Dissolution. — Where the execution of a judgment has been enjoined, and upon the admission of the defendant of a partial payment the injunction is perpetuated for the amount paid and dissolved for the remainder still due, the plaintiff and his surety on the injunction bond are bound to the defendant for damages only on the amount for which the injunction is dissolved. Perry v. Kearney, 14 La. Ann. 401.

5. Assessing Percentage on Judgment Enjoined. — Mason v. Muncaster, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 403; Roberts v. Fahs, 36 Ill. 268; Camp v. Bryan, 84 Ill. 250; Stirlen v. Neustadt, 50 Ill. App. 378; Fawcett v. Pendleton, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 136; McIlvoy v. McIlvoy, 4 Dana (Ky.) 289; Johnson v. Blackford, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 187; Head v. Perry, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 257; Martin v. Wade, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 77; Crawford v. Woodworth, 9 Bush (Ky.) 745; Moss v. Rowland, 3 Bush (Ky.) 507; Claytor v. Anthony, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 518.

Assessment of Ten Per Cent. — The usual provision is to the effect that damages may be assessed on the dissolution of an injunction staying the collection of a money judgment to an amount not exceeding ten per cent. on the sum improperly enjoined. Roberts v. Fahs, 36 Ill. 268; Claytor v. Anthony, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 518.

Assessment of Percentage of Amount Released. — According to the provisions of the statutes in some states, if money shall have been enjoined, the damages thereon shall not exceed ten per cent. on the amount released by the dissolution, exclusive of legal interest and costs. Kennedy v. Hammond, 16 Mo. 341; St. Louis v. Alexander, 23 Mo. 483; Wabash R. Co. v. McCabe, 47 Mo. App. 346; Alliance Trust Co. v. Stewart, 115 Mo. 236. See also Rio Grande R. Co. v. Scanlan, 44 Tex. 649.

On What Amount Given. — On the dissolution of an injunction, the ten per cent. damages should be given on the amount enjoined at the time of granting the injunction, not on the amount enjoined at the time of the dissolution. Bartlett v. Blanton, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 432. See also Veech v. Pennebaker, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 327; McCallister v. Dugan, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 572.

Erroneous to Include Amount of Judgment Enjoined. — In Roberts v. Fahs, 36 Ill. 268, it was held erroneous for the court upon the dissolution of an injunction staying a money judgment, in assessing damages, to include the amount of the judgment enjoined. The proper measure of damages in such case cannot exceed ten per cent. of the judgment enjoined. See also Joslyn v. Dickerson, 71 Ill. 25; Stirlen v. Neustadt, 50 Ill. App. 378; Fernandez v. Casey, 77 Tex. 452.

Error to Allow Damages in Excess of Prescribed Per Cent. — In Camp v. Bryan, 84 Ill. 250, it was held that it is error to allow damages, upon the dissolution of an injunction enjoining the collection of a judgment at law, in excess of ten per cent. upon the amount of the judgment. See also Moss v. Rowland, 3 Bush (Ky.) 507.

but also where a person not a party to the judgment enjoins them.¹

(5) Damages on Dissolution of Injunction Restraining Acts of Ownership — Where a party is restrained, by an injunction wrongfully sued out, from exercising acts of ownership over land, he will be entitled to such damages as are the necessary and proximate result of that deprivation. In determining their extent the court proceeds upon equitable principles, and is not governed by arbitrary or technical rules.²

(6) Damages on Dissolution of Injunction Restraining Sale or Disposal of Goods. — Where an injunction was prayed for the purpose of restraining the defendant from selling, disposing of, or intermeddling with certain goods, the amount properly recoverable in an action on the injunction bond is the loss in value of the goods during the operation of the injunction, not exceeding the penalty of the bond, with interest thereon from the time of the institution of the suit.³

(7) Damages for Enjoining Sale of Property under Deed of Trust. — Under the Missouri statute upon the dissolution of an injunction restraining the sale of property under a deed of trust, the damages assessed should be commensurate with the actual injury sustained, and it is error for the court to assess without proof the damages at a certain percentage of the amount released by the dissolution, as in the case of a proceeding to restrain the collection of money.⁴

3. Costs and Expenses — a. IN GENERAL. — It may be stated as a general rule that where an injunction is finally dissolved, necessary costs and expenses incurred in procuring its dissolution are recoverable.⁵ Where, however, the

Not Applicable to Injunctions Against Decrees. — The statute giving ten per cent. damages on the dissolution of injunctions against judgments does not apply to injunctions against decrees in chancery; therefore no damages can be given on the dissolution of such injunctions. Head v. Perry, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 253. See also McIlvoy v. McIlvoy, 4 Dana (Ky.) 289.

Statute Applies Only Where Money Actually Stayed. — The provisions of the Missouri statute that if money or any proceeding for the collection of money shall have been enjoined the damages shall not exceed ten per cent. of the amount released by the dissolution, exclusive of interest and costs, apply only to cases where the collection of money has been actually stayed by the injunction; in other cases the defendant may recover the damages actually sustained. Hale v. Meegan, 39 Mo. 272. See also Wabash R. Co. v. McCabe, 118 Mo. 640; Kennedy v. Hammond, 16 Mo. 341; St. Louis v. Alexander, 23 Mo. 493.

Assessment on Dissolution of Injunction Restraining Collection of Tax. — In Rio Grande R. Co. v. Scanlan, 44 Tex. 649, it was held that it is proper to render judgment for ten per cent. damages on the dissolution of an injunction restraining the collection of a tax.

Damages for Injunction Restraining Disposition for Nonpayment of Rent. — In Bray v. Poillon, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Expenses Incurred on Reference. — In a proceeding by reference to ascertain the damages sustained by a party in consequence of an injunction restraining him in the exercise of some legal right, it is proper to allow, as a part of the damages, the expenses incurred upon the reference. Holcomb v. Rice, 119 N. Y. 598; Aldrich v. Reynolds, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 613; Lawton v. Green, 64 N. Y. 326; Edwards v. Bodine, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 223.

Time for Which Costs Recoverable. — In a suit upon an injunction bond, the recovery for injunction is merely auxiliary, expenses incurred in defending the action generally are not recoverable.¹

Where Injunction Perpetuated in Part. — When a complainant shows good cause for the interposition of the chancellor, and an injunction granted is perpetuated in part, it is error to decree costs against him.²

b. RECOVERY OF COUNSEL FEES ON DISSOLUTION OF INJUNCTION — (1) In Federal Courts. — In the United States courts it seems that counsel fees cannot be allowed on the injunction bond upon the dissolution of an injunction.³

(2) In State Courts — (a) General Rule — Counsel Fees Recoverable as Damages. — In the state courts a few decisions, following the federal practice, hold that upon the dissolution of an injunction the defendant's counsel fees are not to be allowed as part of his damages,⁴ and are not covered by the injunction bond.⁵ It may be set down as a general rule, however, that where reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses are necessarily incurred alone in procuring the dissolution of an injunction, either when it is the sole relief sought by the action or is merely ancillary thereto, and it is finally decided that the injunction should not have been granted, such fees and expenses may be recovered in an action on the undertaking;⁶ but where the injunction is only auxiliary to the costs and expenses is confined to those which accrued between the time of issuing the injunction and the affirmation of the order dissolving it. Wallis v. Dilley, 7 Md. 237.

Attorneys' Fees on Dissolution of Restraining Order. — Attorneys' fees ordinarily are not recoverable in Nebraska for services rendered in an attempt to dissolve a temporary restraining order pending the hearing of a motion to allow a temporary injunction. Carnes v. Heimrod, 45 Neb. 364.

Action in State Court on Bond Given in Federal Court. — In an action in a state court upon an injunction bond given in a federal court, attorneys' fees for which the plaintiff has become liable may be recovered as damages, though not so recoverable in the federal courts. Wash v. Lackland, 8 Mo. App. 122, the court saying: "It is settled in Missouri that attorneys' fees paid in defense of an injunction suit may be recovered as damages in an action on the injunction bond; and this, although the bond was given and the injunction obtained in a federal court. * * * The rule is the same as to attorneys' fees not actually object of the action, and the liability is incurred in defending the action, and the dissolution of the injunction is only incidental to the result, no recovery can be had on the undertaking for the attorneys' fees and expenses occasioned thereby,¹ since in such case these items could not be regarded as damages sustained "by reason of the injunction."²

Recoverable for Services on Appeal. — According to some decisions, in an action on an injunction bond counsel fees are recoverable as a part of the damages for services rendered in the Supreme Court on appeal, as well as in the court below.³

Allowance of Counsel Fees on Final Hearing. — In at least one state it has been held that where a motion to dissolve the injunction was made, which motion the court refused, deeming it more advisable to defer inquiry into the merits until final hearing, the counsel fees on final hearing as well as those incurred in making the unsuccessful motion were recoverable where on such final hearing the injunction was dissolved.⁴

Injunction Must Render Trial More Difficult or Increase Costs of Defense. — In Allen v. Brown, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 511, it was held that costs or counsel fees, or other expenses of defending an action in which a preliminary injunction has been granted, where there is nothing to show that the injunction rendered the trial of the action more difficult, or that the injunction increased the costs or expense of the defense, are not damages sustained "by reason of the injunction." Suits to Determine Title. — In Allport v. Kelley, 2 Mont. 343, affirming and applying Campbell v. Metcalf, 1 Mont. 381, it was held that in a suit on an undertaking to procure a temporary injunction, the merits of which were never tried, no recovery could be had for attorneys' fees expended in the main suit to determine the title to certain waters in dispute, and evidence offered for such purpose was properly excluded. See also Disbrow v. Garcia, 52 N. Y. 654, distinguishing Andrews v. Glenville Woolen Co., 50 N. Y. 282.

2. Reason for Rule. — Noble v. Arnold, 23 Ohio St. 264; Riddle v. Cheadle, 25 Ohio St. 278. But compare Olds v. Cary, 13 Oregon 362.

3. Services on Appeal. — Bolling v. Tate, 65 Ala. 417, 39 Am. Rep. 5 [overruling Ferguson v. Baber, 24 Ala. 402; Bullock v. Ferguson, 30 Ala. 227]; Porter v. Hopkins, 63 Cal. 53; Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611.

Counsel Fees on Appeal from an Order Refusing to Dissolve an Injunction, taken before the final decree is made, are recoverable if the evidence segregates the amount of such counsel fees from those paid generally in the cause. Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611.

4. Allowance on Final Hearing. — Andrews v. Glenville Woolen Co., 50 N. Y. 282. See also Bolling v. Tate, 65 Ala. 417, 39 Am. Rep. 5; Wallace v. York, 45 Iowa 81; Cook v. Chapman, 41 N. J. Eq. 152; Lyon v. Hersey, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 253; Hovey v. Rubber-Tip Pencil Co., 50 N. Y. 336; Disbrow v. Garcia, 52 N. Y. 655.

See, however, Allen v. Brown, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 511, in which case the court held that the expenses of an unsuccessful motion to set aside an injunction could not be recovered upon an undertaking under Code Pro. N. Y.,

(b) Limitation of Recovery — Confined to Services Rendered in Procuring Dissolution. — The recovery of counsel fees as a part of the damages upon the dissolution of an injunction is limited to fees for services rendered either below or on appeal in procuring the dissolution of the injunction, and does not extend to all the services rendered in the suit in which the injunction was sued out;⁴ and it will be a serious objection to evidence in support of a suggestion of damages of this character that it makes no discrimination between services rendered in the case generally and services which were strictly necessary to procure a dissolution of the injunction.²

No Recovery Where Injunction Defeated on Merits Without Motion for Dissolution. — Attorneys' fees are not recoverable in an action on an injunction bond where no motion for the dissolution of the injunction is made and it is allowed to stand until defeated by a trial upon its merits.³

Fees Should Be Reasonable. — Counsel fees which it is sought to recover should be reasonable,⁴ and the defendant will not be permitted to lay the foundation for large damages against the complainant by employing an unnecessary number of counsel.⁵

(c) Whether Actual Payment of Counsel Fees Necessary. — The general rule is that counsel fees incurred in procuring the dissolution of an injunction may be recovered though they may not have been actually paid; if their payment is contracted for this will be sufficient, provided it was necessary to incur them.⁶

Allowance though Other Matters Involved. — In a suit upon an injunction bond, where it is shown that the suit in which the bond was filed asked relief other than an injunction, it is proper to allow attorneys' fees, and like expenses, in so far as they relate to services rendered in resisting the making of the injunction or in procuring its dissolution, although other matters may be involved in the litigation. Robertson v. Smith, 129 Ind. 422.

(d) Evidence as to Rendition and Value of Services. — It seems necessary, however, that there should be evidence as to the actual rendition of services by counsel, and also as to the value of such services.¹

(e) Amount Question for Jury. — It has been held that the amount of counsel fees to be allowed in an action on an injunction bond for services in dissolving the injunction, being a question of fact, is to be ascertained by a jury and not by the court.²

(f) Amount as Affected by Interests Involved. — It would seem that in measuring the compensation of counsel in dissolving an injunction, not only the time during which counsel were engaged should be considered, but also the magnitude of the case in respect of the property involved.³

I. INTRODUCTORY. — In litigation between railroad companies and the owners of live stock for the killing or injuring of the stock by trains, the liability of the railroad company generally depends either on its negligence in the operation of the train or on its negligence in having failed to erect debarments demanded by statute that animals may not gain access to its tracks. Where negligence in the operation of the road is charged, many cases turn on the contributory negligence of the owner of the animal in permitting it to be at the place of injury; but the authorities are conflicting as to whether the contributory negligence of the owner can be relied upon by the railroad company to defeat an action for damages sustained through its failure to comply with or its violation of a statute requiring it to erect fences.¹

II. NECESSITY OF NEGLIGENCE ON PART OF RAILROAD COMPANY — 1. No Presumption of Negligence at Common Law. — At common law there can, of course, be no recovery against a railroad company for injuring or killing animals on its track unless there is proof of negligence; and the mere killing or injuring affords no presumption of negligence.² But under statutes a presumption of negligence may arise from the fact of injury.³

2. Statutes Creating Presumption of Negligence. — In very many states (chief among which are those where there is no statutory requirement that the railroad companies maintain fences and respond in damages for injuries to animals

There Must Be Proof that the Injury Was Done by the Train, to raise the presumption, and the mere fact that the animal was found wounded near a railroad is not enough. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hagan, 42 Ark. 122, 19 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 446.

But this proof may be circumstantial. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Packwood, 59 Miss. 280, 7 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 584.

Imperfect Light Caused by a Fog at the Time of the Killing may be shown, and the consideration of such fact by the jury is proper in determining the existence of negligence. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Vincent, 36 Ark. 451.

The Burden Is on the Railroad Company to show that the precautions required of it by the Alabama statute (Code Ala. 1876, §§ 1699, 1700; Civ. Code 1896, §§ 3440, 3443) were taken. South, etc., Alabama R. Co. v. Williams, 65 Ala. 74; Central R., etc., Co. v. Lee, 96 Ala. 444.

statutes turn the scales and fix the responsibility, yet when the testimony affirmatively shows that there was no negligence on the part of the railroad company, there can be no recovery.¹

To Rebut the Presumption of Negligence it is not sufficient to prove the exercise of care in certain matters, when such care is not inconsistent with the existence, in other particulars, of negligence rendering the railroad company liable for the injury.² But the presumption is overcome by proof of facts showing that there was no negligence.³

III. STATUTES CREATING ABSOLUTE LIABILITY IRRESPECTIVE OF NEGLIGENCE OR DUTY TO FENCE.—Statutes in some states have provided for the absolute liability of the railroad company under certain circumstances for all live stock and cattle killed or injured by it, without any regard to the actual negligence of the road in running over such animals, or without regard to the company's performance of a statutory duty to fence, but these statutes have uniformly been declared unconstitutional as seeking to deprive the railroad company of its property without due process of law.⁴

IV. STATUTES AWARDED ATTORNEY'S FEES TO PERSONS RECOVERING JUDGMENT.—The statutes, both of some of those states in which there is a specific statutory obligation to fence⁵ and of other states where there is no such specific statutory obligation, provide that the plaintiff may, in some cases, where it is necessary for him to bring suit against a railroad for injury to animals, recover as additional damage a designated attorney's fee, or one to be fixed by the court before which suit is brought and recovery had.⁶

The constitutional provision referred to renders void statutes imposing on railroads an absolute liability for the actual loss sustained (see the Alabama, Florida, Montana, and Utah cases cited above in this note) as well as statutes which impose an absolute liability for double the value of the property injured. See the Colorado and Nebraska cases.

A statute imposing an absolute liability in the nature of a penalty for an injury occurring through the company's neglect to erect and maintain fences as required by law is not unconstitutional. See the titles EXEMPLARY DAMAGES, vol. 12, p. 31; FENCES, vol. 12, pp. 1065, 1066. Also infra, this title, Liability under Statutes Relating to Erection and Maintenance of Fences.

6. Statutes Allowing Attorney's Fees Against Railroads Injuring Animals—Illinois.—Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Franklin, 53 Ill. App. 632.

The Constitutionality of Statutes Allowing the Plaintiff to Recover Attorney's Fees against the railroad company has frequently been called in question, and the decisions are by no means harmonious. Two recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court deal with this matter, but unfortunately they do not reach all aspects of the question. They may be considered, however, as settling that if the statutes of the state require the railroad company to maintain fences along its right of way, the recovery of attorney's fees by the owner of cattle for injury sustained by them through the failure to maintain fences as required is a penalty which it is in the power of the legislature to impose for the non-performance of a statutory duty in the nature of a police regulation;¹ but that if the imposition of attorney's fees on the railroad company is merely a means of securing the payment of a debt, it is arbitrary class legislation, obnoxious to the equality clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.² It would appear, however, that if a statute of this character is limited in its operation to imposing a reasonable attorney's fee on a railroad company which, by negligence in the operation of its road, has injured the plaintiff's live stock, it is to be regarded as valid as a police regulation, though no law requiring the company to fence exists.³ In the state courts the constitutionality of such statutes has generally been upheld,⁴ but in several states these acts have been condemned as unconstitutional.⁵

V. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE ON FENCED ROADS OR INDEPENDENT OF DUTY TO FENCE — 1. Scope of Section. — Under another section of this title the contributory negligence of the owner or of the person in charge of the animal, as affecting the liability of a railroad company upon which rests a statutory duty

2. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. N. S. 752. Chief Justice Fuller and Judges Gray and White dissented in this case, considering that costs are the creatures of statutes, and that, presuming lawful motives on the part of the state legislature, no ground existed for holding that the statute was founded upon such an arbitrary classification as to render it void under the Fourteenth Amendment.

3. In Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, the court (Justices Harlan, Brown, Peckham, and McKenna dissenting) upheld a statute declaring that in action against a railroad company to recover damages resulting from fire caused by the operation of its road, "if the plaintiff shall recover, there shall be allowed him by the court a reasonable attorney's fee, which shall become a part of the judgment." The Ellis case cited in the last note supra was distinguished, and stress was laid upon the fact that in that case was presented for consideration the constitutionality as a whole of a statute which imposed the payment of attorney's fees on the railroad company in various classes of small debts, some of which had no natural connection with the peculiar hazards or duties of a railroad company as such.

to fence for injuries done to animals on unfenced railroad tracks, will be found exhaustively treated.¹ In this section, therefore, the contributory negligence of the owner or person in charge of animals is examined in those cases where the rules governing the liability are independent of a duty to fence — i. e., where the roads were either properly fenced or where there was no statutory duty to fence at the point where the animal entered the track.

3. Whether Contributory Negligence to Allow Animals to Run at Large — a. IN ABSENCE OF SPECIAL STATUTE MAKING IT UNLAWFUL. — Where the question of the railroad company's liability for injuries to animals is not dependent upon a failure on its part to comply with a statute as to erecting debarments,¹ and where it is not dependent upon the question whether the owner of the animal was forbidden by statute to allow it to be at the place of injury,² it frequently becomes necessary to determine whether it is contributory negligence on the part of the owner to allow animals to become trespassers on the right of way of the railroad company.

Jurisdictions Where Contributory Negligence. — Where the common-law rule by which every man was bound to keep his cattle upon his own land is in force,³ it is held that if the owner of cattle suffers them to escape and go upon the right of way and track of the railroad company, they are trespassers; and generally an owner's permitting them to go at large is the proximate cause of their collision with its trains and is contributory negligence which defeats a recovery for their injury.⁴

Jurisdictions Where Not Contributory Negligence. — On the other hand, in many jurisdictions,⁵ in fact in the great majority of the states of the Union, the own-

Where There Is No Statute Requiring Fences, the same rule as to contributory negligence applies as at exceptional places in states having such statutes. Thus, where a person permitted his cow to pass upon the railroad track, he was precluded by contributory negligence from recovering damages for its loss. Tower v. Providence, etc., R. Co., 2 R. Contributory Negligence Question of Fact. — In Sinkling v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 10 S. Dak. 560, it was held that where the plaintiff turned his horse loose on his premises, which were in unobstructed proximity to a railroad track, shortly before the time when a train was accustomed to pass, the question of contributory negligence was one for the jury.

ers of animals are not guilty of contributory negligence in allowing them to go at large so as to defeat a recovery for the negligent injury of such animals by a railroad company.¹

b. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE WHERE ANIMALS UNLAWFULLY AT LARGE.—The authorities are almost unanimous² in holding that when the owner of animals allows them to run at large in a town or elsewhere when there is a statutory prohibition against his doing so, such breach of the law is contributory negligence on his part which will preclude his recovery from the railroad company for their injury on its track.³

Pasturing Stock on Commons of Incorporated Towns.—An owner of animals has the right to pasture them on the commons of incorporated towns, in the absence of local regulations to the contrary; and such conduct, though dangerous and reprehensible, does not constitute contributory negligence on his part nor diminish his right to compensation from a railroad company causing injuries to them. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 59 Miss. 465, 11 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 450.

Animals at Large Where Salt Exposed Near Railroad Track.—The owner of an animal may allow it to run at large notwithstanding he knows that salt has been left exposed near the railroad track, and such knowledge will therefore not constitute contributory negligence. Burger v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 52 Mo. App. 119; Brown v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 27 Mo. App. 394.

2. Permitting Cattle at Large Where Prohibited Not Contributory Negligence—Proximate Cause.

—It has been held that, even in a locality where by statute it is unlawful for stock to run at large, an owner permitting his cattle to be at large is not guilty of contributory negligence so as to prevent a recovery for their injury by a railroad company, his act not being a proximate cause of such injury. *Alabama G. When at Large Not by Fault of Owner. — This rule, however, has no application where the statute has been unintentionally violated without fault on the part of the owner; the fact that the stock was at large at the time of the injury done does not render him guilty of contributory negligence.¹

4. Plaintiff's Negligence Must Proximately Contribute to Injury. — To establish contributory negligence barring a recovery by the plaintiff, his negligent act or omission relied on as a defense must proximately contribute to the injury.²

5. Defendant's Negligence After Discovering Animals on Track. — In the majority of jurisdictions, even though it appears that the plaintiff has negligently exposed his animals to injury by a railroad train, yet if the railroad company, after discovering the exposed situation, runs its train upon them, through a failure to exercise ordinary care, the plaintiff may recover damages.³ It has been held by many courts that where cattle are negligently permitted to run at large near an unfenced railroad track, and are run over and killed by a passing train, their owner may recover damages if the railroad company or its employees were negligent and could have avoided the injury.⁴ In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the owner of cattle is guilty of contribu-

Negligence of Plaintiff and Railroad Company Must Not Be Disconnected. — Contributory negligence exists where the negligence of the plaintiff contributed proximately to the injury of the animal, and it does not contribute proximately where the injury sued for and that resulting from the fault of the plaintiff are disconnected. Pinnell v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 49 Mo. App. 170; Sika v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 21 Wis. 370.

Illustrations of Acts or Omissions Held to Be Proximate Cause. — Where a horse escapes from its owner and goes on the railroad track and runs thereon between five hundred and six hundred feet before it is injured, the jury is authorized in finding that the injury was the proximate, principal, and natural result of the owner's negligence in permitting the horse to escape. Amstein v. Gardner, 134 Mass. 4, 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 585.

Where a herder in charge of animals voluntarily drives them and leaves them uncared for in a place of danger along the railroad track where injury is likely to happen to them, and they are killed, such act is the proximate cause of the injury and will bar a recovery. Keeney v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 19 Oregon 291, 42 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 619.

Allowing Animals to Run at Large has been held not to be the proximate cause of their injury by a railroad train. Needham v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 37 Cal. 409; *Western Maryland R. Co. v. tory negligence in permitting them to go astray where they are likely to get upon the track, and cannot recover against the railroad company, irrespective of its negligence in thereafter running over them.¹

6. Where Doctrine of Comparative Negligence Prevails. — Where the doctrine of comparative negligence prevails, it is applied, of course, in determining the effect of the plaintiff's negligence on his right to recover damages for injury to his stock by a railroad company.²

VI. LIABILITY UNDER STATUTES RELATING TO ERECTION AND MAINTENANCE OF FENCES — 1. General Character of These Statutes. — In England, Canada, and in most of the United States there are statutes dealing with the duty of railroad companies to fence or with their liability for injuries to cattle caused by the absence of fences. Many of these statutes make it the duty of railroads to maintain suitable fences, cattle guards, and gates along the line of their rights of way, except at certain places,³ for the safety of passengers traveling on their trains as well as for the protection from injury⁴ of animals which may stray upon their tracks,⁵ and provide that the failure of the railroad company to observe certain statutory requirements shall be conclusive evidence of negligence rendering it liable to the owner of cattle killed, either for the actual loss sustained by him or for a sum designated in excess thereof.⁶ Other statutes, although they do not specifically make it the duty of railroads to maintain such debarments, yet provide for their liability in damages when animals are killed by their trains because of the absence of fences.¹ Other enactments, again, provide for the maintenance of such barriers without in terms making the road liable for injuries caused by the absence thereof. Where statutes of the latter class exist, the negligence of the road in having failed to comply with the statutory requirement makes it absolutely liable to the owner of animals injured by its trains thereby.²

2. Comparative Negligence — Georgia. — Where a railroad company is not required to fence stock from its track, and where the owner of stock is not required to fence in his stock, the rights of each on uninclosed lands are the same; if stock be injured on such lands by passing trains, the diligence of both the owner and the railroad company is material. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Neely, 56 Ga. 540.

Slight contributory negligence goes in mitigation of damages. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Neely, 56 Ga. 540; Central R., etc., Co. v. Davis, 19 Ga. 437. For the present status of the doctrine in Georgia, see the title COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE, vol. 6, p. 366.

2. Amount of Recovery under These Statutes — Recovery of Actual Damages Sustained.

whether there may be a recovery of more than actual damages depends upon whether the suit is under the particular statute and whether the party seeking to recover has taken certain steps which were requisite to entitle him to recover more than actual damages. Where he has not done so, he sues only for the actual damages sustained, and those alone are recoverable.¹

Recovery of Amount in Excess of Actual Damages. — There is also a class of statutes which not only make the injury to the animal conclusive evidence of negligence on the part of the railroad company for its failure to maintain fences, but also increase the amount of damages which the owner may recover to double ² or treble¹ the value of any animals injured by such default; and some statutes provide that the owner may in some cases recover, in addition to the damages provided by statute, a designated attorney's fee or one to be fixed by the court before which suit is brought and recovery had.²

Penal Character of Double-damage Statutes. — The construction given to these acts by some courts is that the double damages of which recovery is authorized are not in the nature of a fine or penalty, but are simply the measure of damages fixed by the statute for private wrongs.³ On the other hand, some courts, in construing particular statutes, have held that although they provide a compensation to the owner, they also inflict a penalty upon the company for neglect of duty, though the owner recovers the penalty.⁴ The nature of such acts, however, becomes important only as relating to their constitutionality, and reference is here made to that part of this article where that question is treated at length.⁵

3. Kind and Character of Debarments Required — a. KIND AND NATURE OF ANIMALS TO BE EXCLUDED — In General. — Though some of these statutes provide that railroads must erect and maintain debarments sufficient to prevent certain specified classes of domestic animals from getting on their roads,⁶ yet the vast majority of them fail to specify the kind of domestic animals which the debarments required by such statute shall be sufficient to exclude. In the absence of specifications in the statute, it may be said that the fences or cattle guards must be sufficient to exclude or turn all ordinary live stock, and not merely cattle and horses.⁷

Sheep and Swine. — Though statutes sometimes provide that a fence must be sufficient to exclude sheep and swine,⁸ yet where such a clause is wanting, if a fence is insufficient for this purpose the railroad is liable for an injury either to the one⁹ or the other.¹⁰

Where a statute requires a "good and lawful fence" against all animals, the railroad company is liable for injury to hogs getting upon its track, unless it shows that the partic-

When Forbidden by Statute to Run at Large. — In Iowa, where sheep and swine are forbidden by statute to run at large, that fact is no defense to an action for an injury to them by reason of an insufficient fence to exclude them.¹ In Kansas the contrary doctrine prevails. There, under such circumstances, there can be no recovery.²

Dogs. — Dogs not being stock within the meaning of such statutes, railroad companies are not liable for injuries to these animals occurring by reason of insufficient fences.³

b. SUFFICIENCY OF DEBARMENTS TO ANSWER INTENDED PURPOSE —

(1) What Is Sufficient Fence. — It may be laid down as a general rule that in the absence of statutory provision as to the height or the material of which the fences shall be constructed,⁴ a railroad company, in actions for stock killing under these statutes, is held to have performed its duty as to fencing when it erects and maintains a fence which is reasonably sufficient to prevent live stock from coming upon its track.⁵ Whether the particular fence through ular hog injured was of a character against which a lawful fence would be no protection, and the burden of establishing this rests on the railroad. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Roads, 33 Kan. 640; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Bradshaw, 33 Kan. 533. See Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Yates, 21 Kan. 613; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. McHenry, 24 Kan. 501, where damages were not recoverable because the hogs were not such as to be kept out by a "good and lawful fence."

Regard Had to Size but Not to Species of Animals. — In Halverson v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 32 Minn. 88, the evidence showed that the hog for whose killing the suit was brought was young and only about fifteen inches high. The court held that generally, in the case of sheep or swine that get through the fence of a railroad company, the question of the sufficiency of the fence is one of fact, depending on the size of the animal rather than on its species.

1. That Sheep and Swine Forbidden to Run at Large No Defense. — Fritz v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 34 Iowa 337.

2. Contra — Kansas. — Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Yates, 21 Kan. 613; Henning v. Wilkinson, 21 Kan. 747; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Hegwir, 21 Kan. 623; Leebrick v. Republican Valley, etc., R. Co., 41 Kan. 756.

3. Fence Law Does Not Apply to Dogs. — Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, (Tex. App. 1891) 17 S. W. Rep. 1116, construing the Texas statute (Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 4528) requiring railroads to fence against "stock." See also Wilson v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 10 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 52.

4. Statutory Specifications are to be followed. Davidson v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 49 Mich. 428. See also the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1038.

5. Fences Must Be Sufficient to Exclude Ordinary Stock. — McKenly v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 43 Iowa 641; Lemmon v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 32 Iowa 151; Jones v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 59 Mo. A Legal Fence under the General Fence Law has been held sufficient, where there is no special requirement as to railroad fences. Enright v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 33 Cal. 230, Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Thomas, 18 Ind. 215; Corwin

v. New York, etc., R. Co., 13 N. Y. 42. See also the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1080 et seq.

Hedges, Ditches, etc., as Fences. — See the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1037. As to an embankment as a fence under the Wisconsin statute, see the same title, vol. 12, p. 1076, note.

Gates and Gate Fastenings are a part of the fence which it is the duty of the railroad company to maintain. Morrison v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 84 Iowa 663; Manwell v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 89 Iowa 708; Chisholm v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 53 Minn. 122; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Wessendorf, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 39 S. W. Rep. 132. See further the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1081 et seq.

That the duty of keeping gates closed rests upon the railroad company, see Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Wessendorf, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 39 S. W. Rep. 132; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Bellows, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 1000. But compare Megrue v. Lennox, 59 Ohio St. 479, and see generally the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1082.

Where the plaintiff makes a gap in the railroad fence for convenience in delivering goods to the railroad company, and through such gap his team gets on the track and is injured, he cannot recover from the railroad. Clark v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 62 Mich. 358.

For cases wherein the facts were held not to disclose negligence on the part of the railroad company in construction and maintenance of gates, see Mears v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 103 Iowa 203; Harding v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 100 Iowa 677.

The Duty of Erecting and Maintaining Cattle Guards is included in the duty of fencing, and the company is liable for injuries to cattle due to a failure to fulfil this duty. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Reid, 24 Ill. 144; Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Drum, 21 Ill. App. 331; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Farrelly, 3 Ill. App. 60; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Ehrhart, 36 Ind. 118; *Banister v. which the animal entered was or was not sufficient to restrain ordinary animals is generally a question of fact.¹

(2) What Are Sufficient Cattle Guards. — The railroad's liability for insufficient erection or maintenance of cattle guards by reason of which stock is injured is measured by the same standard as is its duty to maintain fences. Thus it has performed its duty when it maintains cattle guards which are ordinarily sufficient to prevent stock from crossing the track, without reference to the question whether such guards will prevent all animals from crossing the track at all times;² but where, judged by this test, the erection³ or the maintenance of the cattle guards⁴ is ordinarily insufficient to serve the purpose for which the law requires guards, the railroad is liable for stock injured thereby.⁵

4. Whether Actual Contact Between Train and Animal Essential to Liability. — Though the statutes in some jurisdictions require in express terms that there be an actual collision between the animal injured and the cars or engines of the railroad company to render it liable for a failure to maintain debarments, the vast majority of the statutes are silent upon that subject. In some states it is held that actual contact is a prerequisite to the liability of the railroad company;⁶ in others that no such prerequisite exists where a failure to com-

5. Liability as Between Owners and Operators—a. IN GENERAL.—Where a corporation is at once the owner and the operator of a railroad, no doubt can exist as to its liability for injuries due to a failure to perform its statutory duty to fence. The joint liability of other parties may, however, be involved, and where the owner and the operator are different corporations the question which of these is liable, and whether the liability rests on both, may arise. These questions depend largely upon the construction of particular statutes.

b. WHO ARE AGENTS OF CORPORATION.—Where the Corporation "and Its Agents" are by statute liable for injuries so inflicted, the term "agent" has been held to embrace not only lessees or others operating the road in the place of the company,² but also the servants of the operating company, such as engineers³ and firemen⁴ as well as contractors.⁵

c. LESSORS AND LESSEES—Liability of Lessor or Owner.—Where a statute specifically provides that the lessor or both the lessor and the lessee shall be liable,⁶ and generally when there is no provision in the statute fixing the liability as between these parties,⁷ the owner or lessor company is responsible

The Tennessee Act of 1891 imposing an absolute liability upon railroads for injuries to stock on unfenced railroad tracks can have no application to stock killed by falling down an unfenced embankment on the track, since at common law the company would not have to maintain fences, and hence generally is not liable for injury to stock in such cases. *Sinard v. No Liability for Animals Suffering Ill Health by Fright.—A railroad company is not liable by reason of its failure to fence its track for the loss of flesh of cattle caused by their becoming frightened by passing trains while they are upon the railroad's right of way. Dooley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 36 Mo. App. 381.

2. Meaning of Agents.—Lessees are agents. Clement v. Canfield, 28 Vt. 302.

So a company operating a road under a contract with its owner is an agent. Bay City, etc., R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 390.

Company Which Has Leased Entire Property of

Another Road Not Its Agent.—Under section 32 of the New York Railroad Law as amended in 1892, it has been held that where the railroad company has leased its entire property, except its right to exist as a corporation, to another company, the lessee company cannot be considered as the "agent" of the lessor so as to render the latter liable for cattle injured by the trains of the lessee. "The word agents in the statute," said the court, "has reference only to the agents of the corporation or person operating the road." Throne v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 88 Hun (N. Y.) 141.

McDougall*, 108 Ind. 179; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Leviston, 97 Ind. 488; Wabash R. Co. v. Williamson, 3 Ind. App. 190. For cases under an earlier statute see *Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. The lessor's liability is not affected by the fact that the lessee operates the road in its own name. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Solomon, 23 Ind. 534; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Bunnell, 61 Ind. 183.

This seems to be the effect of the statutes in Maine. Whitney v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 44 Me. 362, 69 Am. Dec. 103. See Rev. Stat. Me. (1883), c. 51, § 36.

Where a Contractor Is Operating Trains on an Unfinished Railroad under the control of the railroad company, the latter remains liable for injuries caused to cattle by such trains by reason of the want of fences. Wyman v. Penobscot, etc., R. Co., 46 Me. 162.

7. Lessor's Liability for Injury to Animals on Unfenced Railroad.—Fontaine v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 54 Cal. 645, 1 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 159; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Kanouse, 39 Ill. 272, 89

for animals injured on an unfenced portion of its road by the trains of a lessee corporation operating such part of the road. But it has been held that after a lease of the whole property of a railroad company, the lessor is not liable.¹

Liability of Lessee.—Of course where the particular statute makes the lessee liable for all injuries to animals occasioned by its cars while operating on an unfenced railroad track, there can be no question as to its liability.² In the absence of such a provision the prevailing rule is that the negligence of the lessor company in failing to maintain debarments is to be imputed to the lessee company running the trains so as to render the latter liable.³

In Texas a company leasing its road without the permission of the state remains liable. International, etc., R. Co. v. Dunham, 68 Tex. 231, 2 Am. St. Rep. 484.

Lease or Contract Must Be Shown.—It has been held that to charge the lessor for injury caused by the lessee's rolling stock, the lease must be shown, for the owner of the tract would not be liable for an unauthorized use of its track. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Paskins, 36 Ind. 380; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Townsend, 39 Ind. 38.

1. Throne v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 88 Hun (N. Y.) 141.

But it seems that where one railroad company merely allows to another the limited use of its tracks under a traffic agreement, the former company continues liable for injuries to cattle by the trains of the latter, since the latter is not a "lessee" or "other person in possession of" the road within the statute. Edwards v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 5 N. Y. App. Div. 390. See also Dolan v. Newburgh, etc., R. Co., 120 N. Y. 571.

2. Lessee's Liability under Special Statute.—In Indiana, under Rev. Stat., §§ 4001, 4025, lessees, assignees, and other persons and corporations operating any railroad or running trains thereover are liable for injuring cattle by failure to fence. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Leviston, 97 Ind. 488; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. McDougall, 108 Ind. 179; Wabash R. Co. v. Williamson, 3 Ind. App. 190. Under an earlier statute the lessee, assignee, etc., could be held liable when operating the road in the name of the lessor or owner, but incurred no liability in operating it in its own name. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Norris, 61 Ind. 285; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Bonnell, 61 Ind. 183; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Hannon, 60 Ind. 417; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Bolner, 57 Ind. 572; Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Downey, 61 Ind. 287.

Contractor Operating Road.—Under the earlier statute the railroad company was liable for an injury inflicted by a contractor operating trains under the name of the company. Huey v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 45 Ind. 320.

The Iowa statute specifically declares the liability of lessee companies for stock injured by their trains. Stephens v. Davenport, etc., R. Co., 36 Iowa 327. In this case the court intimated that this clause was added to the law in view of a decision in Liddle v. Keokuk, etc., R. Co., 23 Iowa 378, that the previous law, rendering liable any company running or operating a railroad, did not apply to a person who was not "individually the lessee and in the possession of and running said road." The earlier statute was held to apply to a railroad company which was a lessee and in possession of and running a railroad owned by another company. Stewart v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 27 Iowa 282.

Under the New York statute (General Railroad Law, § 32, as amended in 1892), "any lessee or other person in possession of" the road is declared liable for injury to animals occurring by reason of the failure to maintain sufficient fences. Edwards v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 8 N. Y. App. Div. 390.

The Oregon statute renders liable any corporation "or lessee or agent thereof owning or operating any railroad." Hill's Annot. Laws Oregon (1892), § 4044. The purpose of this statute is to make the company owning the road and the company operating the road liable, so that either may be sued, as the plaintiff may elect. Eaton v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 19 Oregon 391.

The Washington statute provides for the liability of corporations "owning or operating steam railways." Ball. Annot. Codes & Stat. Wash. (1897), § 4332; Oregon R., etc., Co. v. Dacres, 1 Wash. 195.

A statute of this kind seems sufficient to impose a liability upon the lessee, for it has been held that the lessee is essentially the owner and operator of the road. Tracy v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 38 N. Y. 433, 98 Am. Dec. 54, affirming 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 529.

3. Lessee Liable in Absence of Statute.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Kanouse, 39 Ill. 272, 89 Am. Dec. 307; East St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Gerber, 82 Ill. 632; Bay City, etc., R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 390; Tracy v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 38 N. Y. 435, 98 Am. Dec. 54, affirming 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 529; McCall v. Chamberlain, 13 Wis. 637; Cook v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 36 Wis. 45. And see the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1068, note.

The lessee may be liable as the actual operator of the road. International, etc., R. Co. v. Dunham, 68 Tex. 231, 2 Am. St. Rep. 484. And see the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1067.

Lessee Cannot Be Held Liable for Stock Killed Before Execution of Lease.—Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Kain, 35 Ind. 291, 5 Am. R. Rep. 574.

Company Operating Road Merely by Permission Not Lessee.—Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Ewing, 23 Kan. 273.

In Canada a Lessee Has Been Held Not Liable for neglect to maintain fences, which resulted in the killing of the plaintiff's cattle, there being no other negligence charged or proved.

Either Lessor or Lessee Liable. — In many states, liability for injuries to cattle under such circumstances may be enforced against either the lessor or the lessee,¹ but it has been held that only the company whose trains actually caused the injury may be held liable.²

d. TRACKS USED BY BOTH OWNER AND ANOTHER. — Where a railroad track is used by both the owner and another company, under an agreement for the use of the track, and an injury to cattle is caused by the rolling stock of the latter company, the owner has been held liable as such,³ and the other company has been held to incur liability as actual operator.⁴ In some states either company is liable,⁵ but in Iowa, where the trains of two companies thus use the same track, only that company whose rolling stock actually caused the injury can be held liable.⁶

e. ROAD OPERATED BY RECEIVER. — The statutes of some states make railroad companies liable for animals injured on their unfenced railroad tracks, although at the time of the injury the road may be operated by a receiver.⁷ In the absence of a statute, however, specifically making the road liable in such a case, the receiver⁸ and not the railroad company⁹ would be liable, unless the failure to fence occurred when the railroad itself was the operator and existed when the receiver assumed charge; in such cases the railroad company has been held liable.¹⁰

6. Place of Entrance Rather than of Injury Governs Liability. — In order to recover under these statutes a failure to maintain proper debarments must of course be the cause of the injury for which compensation is sought. Hence, the liability of the railroad company depends on the question whether the animal entered upon the track at a point where the company should have maintained debarments but failed to do so, rather than upon the question of the existence of debarments at the place of injury.¹¹ Thus, though it may not have been the duty of the railroad to maintain debarments at the place of injury, yet if the animal entered its track where such duty was owing it is liable.¹ On the other hand, if the animal entered the track at a place where it was not the duty of the company to maintain debarments, it is not liable irrespective of the condition of the debarments at the place of injury and irrespective of the question whether it was the duty of the road to maintain debarments at such place.²

Presumption as to Place of Entry. — In some jurisdictions it is held that where the track is unfenced or defectively fenced at the point where the animal is injured, it will be presumed that the animal entered upon the track at that place.³ In Wisconsin it has been held that no such presumption will be indulged.⁴

7. Contributory Negligence under These Statutes — a. EFFECT REGULATED BY STATUTE. — The statutes of two states expressly provide that in actions for injuries to animals grounded on laws requiring railroads to fence, the plaintiff's contributory negligence bars a recovery.⁵ In Iowa it is expressly declared that contributory negligence is no defense.⁶

b. WHERE STATUTES ARE SILENT AS TO EFFECT OF CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE. — In the absence of a special provision in the statutes there is much conflict of authority. In a number of jurisdictions contributory negligence on the part of the owner of the animal injured bars his recovery against the railroad under the railroad fencing laws.⁷ In about an equal number of animal is guilty of such negligence (if, indeed, it may be called such)¹ contributing to the collision between the train and the animal as to amount to a willingness to suffer the injury. Thus, where a person actually drives his animal on an unfenced railroad track,² or does some other positive act³ or is guilty of some default which under the circumstances evinces an intention to abandon the animal to injury,⁴ such act or default will relieve the railroad of liability in those jurisdictions where ordinary contributory negligence is no defense.⁵

3. Acts of Owner Defeating Liability of Railroad. — The only exceptions to the rule making railroad companies liable for injuries to animals through negligence by them in maintaining fences at places where the statute requires them are in cases where it appears that the owners wilfully drove their animals on the road, or voluntarily permitted them to stray upon the track, or did some positive act increasing the danger. Brady v. Rensselaer, etc., R. Co., 1 Hun (N. Y.) 378, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 537.

Turning Out a Blind Horse on an Unfenced Common through which a railroad ran was held to be conduct amounting to a willingness to suffer an injury to the animal, which relieved the railroad of all liability for killing it. Knight v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 24 Ind. 402.

A Licensee Stands in the Shoes of the Occupier of Land as to the Latter's Positive Act, so that if the occupier has voluntarily removed part of the railroad fence bounding land upon which he permits another to pasture animals, the latter cannot recover for animals which stray through this opening and are injured. McCoy v. Southern Pac. Co., 94 Cal. 568.

The Owner Is Bound by the Act of the Borrower of an animal, and if the borrower becomes intoxicated and rides a borrowed horse to a railroad crossing, where, in consequence of the absence of cattle guards, the horse turns upon the track and is injured, the circumstances show an abandonment, and there can be no recovery under the statute requiring railroad companies to fence. Welty v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 105 Ind. 55, 24 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 371.

9. Company's Notice of Defect as Affecting Its Liability. — In order to charge a railroad company with liability under these statutes for failure to maintain fences, the company must be fixed with notice, either direct or implied from circumstances, of the defect by reason of which the injury occurred.¹ It must use ordinary diligence to make repairs within a reasonable time after it has discovered a defect in its fences or has received notice thereof.² But it is its duty to keep informed, and it is conclusively charged with notice of defects which have existed for an unreasonable length of time.³

In Missouri it has been held that if a fence is defective, the fact that sufficient time has not elapsed since it got out of repair to enable the railroad company to repair it is matter of defense which the company must show. Busby v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 81 Mo. 43.

Reasonable Care and Diligence is all that is required of a railroad company in maintaining its fences. It is not an insurer. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 152; Varco v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 18, 11 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 419; Carey v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 61 Wis. 71.

Circumstances Showing Due Diligence. — Where an inspection made on Saturday afternoon at four o'clock showed the fence in good condition, and the road was inspected again on Monday morning, when it was found that the fence had been recently broken, and that cattle had gotten on the road and been injured, it was held that the company had shown reasonable diligence in keeping the fence in repair, and was not liable for the cattle injured. Volume XVI.

10. Duty to Maintain Debarments at Particular Points. — The particular places at which railroads are required to maintain fences under these statutes have been considered elsewhere.¹

11. Company's Liability as Affected by Right of Cattle to Be at Large. — At the common law and in several of the United States the owner of cattle is bound to keep them fenced in; in other states this duty does not rest on the owner of cattle so that they are trespassers when found on the uninclosed lands of another, but animals may wander at large and are not trespassers unless they get upon lands inclosed by a proper fence.² These different rules of law have an important bearing on the liability of railroad companies under statutes requiring railroads to fence and rendering them liable for injuries to stock when they fail in this duty. Such statutes unquestionably protect persons whose lands adjoin the railroad, and their cattle entering on the railroad through a defective fence do not become trespassers so as to affect the owner's right to recover for their injury.³ But in jurisdictions where the common-law duty of keeping up cattle is recognized, if the cattle of a nonadjoining owner wander on the land of an adjoining owner, the animals are trespassers thereon, and unless the railroad fencing acts avail such nonadjoining owner, such animals wandering further upon the railroad are trespassers, and the railroad company is not liable for injuring them in the absence of actual negligence.

Statutes Held to Avail Those Only Whose Cattle Rightfully on Adjoining Lands. — In several jurisdictions these fencing acts are regarded as being for the benefit of adjoining owners only, and, the common-law rule as to inclosing cattle prevailing, it is held, in accordance with the view just indicated, that the owner of cattle cannot recover by force of the statute for their injury if they were trespassers at the point where they entered upon the lands of the railroad.⁴

Unreasonable. — Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 45 Ind. 90.

Volume XVI.

Cattle on Adjoining Land with Consent of Owner. — Where the owner of adjoining land contracts with or grants permission to another to keep the latter's animals upon this land, the railroad company is liable for their injury to the same extent as if the animals were the property of the adjoining owner.¹

Statutes Avail All Whose Cattle Are Injured through Company's Failure to Fence. — In the majority of jurisdictions in the United States, the railroad company is held liable to the owner for injuries to animals which, because of a defect in or the absence of statutory debarments, stray upon the track from an adjoining close, or from a point where they were at large, whether such animals were lawfully or unlawfully at large, or lawfully or unlawfully on the land from which they strayed.²

In Missouri it appears that if an animal belonging to a nonadjoining owner comes upon the railroad from an adjoining owner's land into which it had gotten in spite of such land being inclosed with a lawful fence, and upon which it was therefore a trespasser, the railroad is not liable for its injury. Berry v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 65 Mo. 172; Harrington v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 80 Mo. 620; Peddicord v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 85 Mo. 160; *Carpenter v. App. 459. The rule is otherwise, however, if the nonadjoining owner shows that his animals were upon the adjoining land rightfully, as by contract with or license from the owner thereof. Summers v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 29 Mo. App. 41; Smith v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 25 Mo. App. 113. But this doctrine has no application where the animal comes upon the railroad from uninclosed lands, Kaes v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 6 Mo. App. 397; Duke v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 39 Mo. App. 105; Kinion v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 39 Mo. App. 382; Board v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 36 Mo. App. 151; Jackson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 43 Mo. App. 324; Dean v. Omaha, etc., R. Co., 54 Mo. App. 647; or from lands of an adjoining proprietor which are defectively fenced, Carpenter v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 25 Mo. App. 110; Peddicord v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 85 Mo. 160; Harrington v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 384; or from a street in a town, in the absence of evidence that the animal was in the street in violation of a town ordinance, Brandenburg v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 44 Mo. App. 224.

Cattle Are Not Presumed as Rightfully Going at Large; there must be proof that the county or town in which an animal was injured permitted it to do so. Hence, if cattle are injured by a train through a failure of the railroad company to comply with the statutory requirements as to fences upon common land, the railroad company is not liable. Perkins v. Eastern R. Co., 29 Me. 307, 50 Am. Dec. 589.

United States the fact that there is a special statute against or a special law applying to a particular county, making it unlawful for such animals to be at large at the time and place of injury, does not affect the liability of the railroad company,¹ unless perchance through the fault of the owner, in those jurisdictions where contributory negligence is a defense to actions under these statutes.²

Such Statutes Held to Relieve Railroad Company of Liability. — In a few jurisdictions, however, it is held that a statute or by-law forbidding animals to run at large is a complete defense to an injury to such animal resulting from the fact that the railway track was unfenced.³

12. Constitutionality of Such Statutes. — The constitutionality of statutes which impose the duty of fencing upon railroad companies and render them liable for injuries to cattle if they fail in this duty has almost uniformly been upheld.⁴

These statutes impose a special duty upon railroad corporations by reason of the business in which they are engaged, and in the valid exercise of the police power of the state provide for the enforcement of the duty thus created by allowing the recovery of compensatory or double damages¹ in case of nonperformance, without regard to the existence of other negligence on the company's part.²

Not Class Legislation. — Statutes of this character do not deprive railroad companies of the equal protection of the law or deny to them due process of law within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, or within the meaning of similar provisions in state constitutions.³

The Fact that the Statute May Expressly Exclude the Defense of Contributory Negligence does not affect its constitutionality.⁴

Not Ex Post Facto as Applied to Existing Railroads. — Such statutes are not unconstitutional on the ground that such enactments are ex post facto as applied to roads operating under existing charters at the time of the enactment.⁵

1. Allowance of Double Damages Unconstitutional. — The allowance of double damages, being strictly punitive, has been held unconstitutional in Nebraska, where the recovery of damages as a punishment is not allowed. Grand Island, etc., R. Co. v. Swinbank, 51 Neb. 521; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, 29 Am. Rep. 356. See also the title EXEMPLARY DAMAGES, vol. 12, p. 9, note. Where These Acts Are Regarded as of a Penal Character, as is usually the case, they have been held valid as against the objection that they violated a constitutional provision requiring that fines and penalties be paid to a particular fund. *Barnett v. Where the Statutes Impose the Same Liability on All Railroad Companies operating in the jurisdiction for injuries to animals on their unfenced railroad tracks, such laws, of course, are not special because the duty to erect and maintain fences and the statutory liability for the failure to do so are not also imposed upon other classes of corporations and persons. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Belcher, 89 Ky. 193, 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 228.

A Statute Requiring Fences on Railroads Thereafter to Be Constructed does not apply to a railroad already partially constructed. Stearns v. Old Colony, etc., R. Corp., 1 Allen (Mass.) 493.

Statutes Not Creating Duty but Declaring Liability. — Statutes which merely impose a liability on railroad companies for cattle killed or injured in the absence of fences have been almost uniformly upheld in state courts as against constitutional objections.¹ But such legislation has been held unconstitutional in Washington as imposing a penalty without creating a corresponding duty — a taking of property without due process of law.² It has been justly observed that the creation of a liability for injuries occasioned by a failure to fence is equivalent to creating a duty to fence.³

VII. NECESSITY OF STATUTE TO MAKE RAILROADS LIABLE MERELY BECAUSE OF NONEXISTENCE OF FENCES. — Since the obligation to fence or the obligation to pay for stock killed because of a failure to fence exists only by statute, the liability of a railroad company for injury to stock, where there is no statute on the subject, must be determined upon the principles of the common law as it exists in the several states. Only actual negligence on the part of the railroad company will render it liable.⁴ If such

INJURY, INJURE, ETC. (See also the titles DAMAGES, vol. 8, p. 537; DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA, vol. 8, p. 694; MALICIOUS MISCHIEF; TORTS; and see WRONG.)—An injury is a wrong for which the law provides a remedy.² To injure means to do wrong or harm to; to cause loss or detriment to; to impair soundness, as of health; to damage and lessen the value of; to make worse.³

Statute Construed Not to Require Maintenance of Fences in Absence of Order from Railroad Commissioners.—Campbell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 50 Conn. 128.

Contract Imposing Same Duty as Statute.—A contract by a railroad company to fence its track through certain land imposes on it the same duties and liabilities with respect to the killing of stock as would be imposed by a statute requiring it to fence. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Washington, 49 Fed. Rep. 347.

Where a railway company contracted with a landowner to fence its track, and by reason of its neglect in so doing the landowner's cattle get upon the track and are killed, the killing is negligence, irrespective of any negligence in the management and operation of the engines and trains. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Washington, 4 U. S. App. 121.

1. Railroad Not Liable when Not Guilty of Negligence.—Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, 53 Ala. 595; Macon, etc., R. Co. v. Vaughn, 48 Ga. 464; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Engle, 84 Ill. 397; Kuhn v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 11 W. Va. 94.

2. Injury.—"An injury, legally speaking, consists of a wrong done to a person, or, in other words, a violation of his right. * * * As an injury * * * necessarily imports damage, there can be no such thing as an injury without damage. An injury is a wrong, and for the redress of every wrong there is a remedy." Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 302.

"We understand the word injury (or injured), as used in the constitution, to mean such a legal wrong as would be the subject of an action for damages at common law." Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. St. 561, 21 W. N. C. (Pa.) 300. See also Pennsylvania Schuylkill Valley R. Co. v. Walsh, 124 Pa. St. 558.

Injury means in general any wrong or damage done to a man's person, rights, reputation, or goods. Jordan v. State, 142 Ind. 427, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 1.

Deprivation of Legal Right.—In Brittle Silver Co. v. Rust, 10 Colo. App. 470, it was said: "The case cannot be included within the scope of the * * * word injury, which can only be taken to mean the deprivation of some legal right."

Injury means in general "any wrong or damage done to a man's person, rights, reputation, or goods." Northern R. Co. v. Carpentier, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 222, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 250, citing Webster's Dict.

Whether the Term "Injury" Includes Injury Resulting in Death.—A statute provided that whoever intentionally and without malice pointed or aimed any firearm at or towards any person, and by the discharge of such firearm maimed or injured the person, should be fined, etc. In construing this statute the court said: "It is urged with force that the word injures is broad enough to, and does in fact, include the death of the person injured—that the loss of the life is the greatest injury a person can suffer. But we think this claim is not well founded. The definition of the verb 'to injure,' as given in the lexicons, is 'to do harm; to hurt; to damage; to hurt or wound the person.' And we think it is certainly the usage to attach to the word the meaning of hurting or wounding which does not result fatally. We speak of persons killed and injured, thus making a wide distinction between the two." Williamson v. State, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 492, 2 Ohio Cir. Ct. 292.

3. Injure.—Job v. Harlan, 13 Ohio St. 494, in which case it was held that an injury to sheep by dogs, by chasing and worrying them, was within the Ohio statute for the protection of sheep.

The term injure in a statute against inflicting any punishment or bodily injury upon another has been held to import a trespass. State v. Porter, 25 W. Va. 689.

Injure and Destroy Distinguished.—See Com. v. Sullivan, 107 Mass. 218.

Injuriously Affecting.—As to what injuriously affects property within statutes allowing compensation for property injuriously affected by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, see the title EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, pp. 1103, 1109.

Unlawful Act Implied.—In Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 781, it was said: "It [a statute] nowhere said that these acts were lawful, but it expressly calls them by the proper legal name, injuries, which ex vi termini imports that they are unlawful, or otherwise they would only be damnum absque injuria. An injury is a 'wrong or tort.'"

Injury and Damage.—In Smith v. Brown, L. R. 6 Q. B. 732, it was said: "We speak, indeed, of damages as compensation for injury done to the person; but the term 'damage' is not employed interchangeably with the term injury, with reference to mischief wrongfully occasioned to the person."

In North Vernon v. Voegler, 103 Ind. 318, it was said: "There is a material distinction between damages and injury. Injury is the wrongful act or tort which causes loss or harm to another. Damages are allowed as an indemnity to the person who suffers loss or harm from the injury. The word injury denotes the illegal act, the term 'damages' means the sum recoverable as amends for the wrong.

INJURY TO CHILDREN. — See the titles CROSSINGS, vol. 8, p. 335; CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE, vol. 7, p. 4457; INFANTS, ante, p. 255; PARENT AND CHILD; STREET RAILWAYS; STREETS AND SIDEWALKS; TURNTABLES.

The words are sometimes used as synonymous terms, but they are, in strictness, words of widely different meaning. There is more than a mere verbal difference in their meaning, for they describe essentially different things. The law has always recognized a difference between the things described, for it is often declared that no action will lie because the act is damnum absque injuria. Citing Broom's Legal Maxims 195; Weeks on Damnum Absque Injuria 7; Broom's Com. (4th ed.) 75, 621.

For the use of injury in the sense of damage, see Bellows v. Allen, 22 Vt. 113.

Same — Civil Damage Act. (See also the title CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS, vol. 6, p. 36.) — A civil damage act provided that any bond taken pursuant to it might be sued upon for the use of any person who might be injured by the selling or giving away of any intoxicating liquors. In construing this statute the court said: "We think the word injured here is synonymous with the word 'damaged,' and the true reading and meaning of the part of the section referred to is 'any person who may be injured' — in other words, may suffer damage." Gran v. Houston, 45 Neb. 823.

In Smith v. Wilcox, 47 Vt. 537, it was held that the word injury in a civil damage act was used in the sense of unlawful damage or hurt, and that anything done in self-defense would not be actionable under the statute.

Under the Illinois statute giving a remedy for injuries occasioned by the sale of intoxicating liquors, the family of the inebriate may be injured in their means of support although not deprived of the bare necessities of life; and "whatever lessens or impairs" the ability of the husband and father "to supply the suitable comforts which might reasonably be expected from one in his occupation and with his capacity for earning money may be regarded as lessening or impairing their means of support." Herring v. Ervin, 48 Ill. App. 369.

Applies Equally to Property or Persons. — The charter of a municipal corporation provided that no action for an injury caused by defective streets should be maintained unless notice was given to the corporation within thirty days after the injury. It was held that this included injury to persons as well as property. The court said: "As to the first of these objections, the phrase 'on account of any injuries received by means of any defect,' etc., includes as well injuries to property as to persons; and to hold the subsequent phrase 'and that the person so injured' (perfectly correct language to use in respect to one injured in his property) as qualifying the former phrase would be a strained construction." Nichols v. Minneapolis, 30 Minn. 545. See generally the title MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Injury to Cattle. — In Allday v. Great Western R. Co., 5 B. & S. 903, 117 E. C. L. 903, it was held that an injury to cattle, within an English Carriers Act, was caused where a loss of condition resulted from their having been kept on the train for several hours without food or water, owing to their having been

Notice of Injury. — The words "person injured," used in a proviso to the Vermont statute requiring that notice be given to the selectmen in case of injury on the highway, refer to the person injured in the accident, and not to a person injured pecuniarily. Eames v. Brattleboro, 54 Vt. 471. See also the title HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 483.

Intent to Injure. — In Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 23 Q. B. D. 612, Bowen, L. J., said: "We were invited by the plaintiffs' counsel to accept the position from which their argument started, that an action will lie if a man maliciously and wrongfully conducts himself so as to injure another in that other's trade. Obscurity resides in the language used to state this proposition. The terms 'maliciously,' 'wrongfully,' and injure are words all of which have accurate meanings, well known to the law, but which also have a popular and less precise signification, into which it is necessary to see that the argument does not imperceptibly slide. An intent to injure in strictness means more than an intent to harm. It connotes an attempt to do wrongful harm. 'Maliciously,' in like manner, means and implies an intention to do an act which is wrongful, to the detriment of another. The term 'wrongful' imports in its turn the infringement of some right." See also Allen v. Flood, (1898) A. C. 93.

In State v. Hair, 37 Minn. 351, it was held that in a prosecution for maiming under the Minnesota Code the injury must be wilfully inflicted with intent to injure, disfigure, or disable, and that the words "intent * * * to injure" refer to injuries of the same class specified in the statute or such as might reasonably be expected to be dangerous or to result in serious bodily harm. See also the title MAYHEM.

An intent to injure is a general guilty intent. U. S. v. Taintor, 11 Blatchf. (U. S.) 374; U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. Rep. 481; People v. Carmichael, 5 Mich. 10; People v. Edwards, 5 Mich. 22.

Injure Trade. — In U. S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. Rep. 748, it was said: "A distinction has been suggested between the phrase 'in restraint of trade' and the phrases 'to injure trade' and 'to restrain trade.' Though perceptible, the distinction does not seem to me so significant that the use of one expression rather than the other should vary the interpretation of this statute. Any contract, combination, or conspiracy, to be in restraint of trade, must involve the use of means of which the effect is to injure or to restrain trade. A contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade is therefore a contract, combination, or conspiracy to restrain or to injure trade." See the titles RESTRAINT OF TRADE; TRADE COMBINATIONS AND CORPORATE TRUSTS.

Popular Sense. — Four spars were hired for an indefinite period, to aid in raising a steamboat that was sunk. For the use of each the owner of the boat was to pay one dollar a day, and if they were lost or injured he was to pay at the rate of twenty-five dollars each for three of them, and ten for the fourth. It was held that the terms "lost or injured" were to be understood in a popular sense, and although the spars were not actually lost or injured, the owner of the boat might, if he retained them, upon paying eighty-five dollars, the price agreed, avoid the payment of hire for the use of spars. The court said: "The terms 'lost or injured' are not to be construed in their strictest sense, and as excluding every other cause which may have prevented their return, but they are to be understood as having been used to express the idea of a failure to return the spars, without reference to any particular cause therefor." Pope v. Murray, 6 Ala. 491.

Injure and Defraud Distinguished.—A statute provided that it should be an indictable offense for the cashier of a bank to embezzle, abstract, or wilfully misapply the moneys or funds of the bank with intent to injure or defraud the bank. In construing this provision the court said: "Nor can such effect be given these words without treating the word injure as synonymous with 'defraud,' and as referring to a misapplication for the benefit of the doer. But, if the signification of the word 'defraud' be limited to a malicious dealing with property for the personal advantage of the doer—and it is not always to be so limited—the word injure is not of such limited application, and was doubtless inserted to cover cases of misapplication causing injury to the association without benefit to the offender." U. S. v. Taintor, 11 Blatchf. (U. S.) 378. See also U. S. v. Harper, 33 Fed. Rep. 471. And see the title EMBEZZLEMENT, vol. 10, p. 1013.

Injurious and Wrongfully.—In State v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 27 Vt. 103, it was held that the word "unlawfully" was not indispensable in an indictment against a railroad company for erecting a nuisance. The court said: "We do not think the word 'unlawfully' indispensable to the sufficiency of the second, third, and fourth counts. Any other words, as 'injurious and wrongfully,' which are found in the bill, are equally available and sufficient."

Injuries to Persons. (See also PERSONAL INJURIES.)—A statute conferred upon justices of the peace jurisdiction in actions for injuries to persons where the damages claimed did not exceed a certain amount. It was held that the words "injuries to persons" included injuries to the relative rights of persons as well as injuries to their absolute rights. The court said: "Actions for seducing wives, daughters, or servants, or for enticing away or harboring apprentices or servants, are said to be for injuries to the relative rights of persons; and we are inclined to think a justice has jurisdiction to try such actions where the damages claimed do not exceed two hundred dollars." Wightman v. Devere, 33 Wis. 575, distinguishing Gibbs v. Larrabee, 23 Wis. 495; Wagner v. Lathers, 26 Wis. 336.

Same—Injury to Reputation.—In Johnson v. Bradstreet Co., 87 Ga. 81, it was held that in- jury to reputation was injury to the person. The court said: "Under the head of 'security in person' Cooley includes the right to life, immunity from attacks and injuries, and to reputation. Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 23, 24. See also Pollock on the Law of Torts 7. Bouvier classes among absolute injuries to the person batteries, injuries to health, slander, libel, and malicious prosecutions."

Same—Wife as Witness Against Husband. (See also the title WITNESSES.)—A statute provided that either the husband or the wife should be a competent witness against the other, where he or she should be "the party injured by the offense committed." In construing this statute the court said: "The word injured as employed must be construed in its plain, ordinary, and usual sense. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 240. It is not to be limited to personal or physical injuries, but in its plain, ordinary, and usual sense it signifies the privation of a legal right." Jordan v. State, 142 Ind. 422.

In an act providing that the party injured shall be a competent witness in criminal actions, "by injured party is meant the person who is the immediate and direct sufferer from the offense committed." People v. Howard, 17 Cal. 63.

Injurious to Health.—In Local Board of Health v. Malton Farmers' Manure, etc., Co., 4 Ex. D. 302, it was held that the case of an offensive trade causing effluvia was within the English Public Health Act, if the effluvia, though not injurious to persons in sound health, caused sick persons to become sicker. Kelly, C. B., said: "The effluvia is the gravamen of the grievance complained of, and that has caused sick persons to become worse. It is clear that this comes within the strict words of the Act as an injury to health." See generally the title NUISANCES.

Serious Bodily Injury.—See SERIOUS.

Public Officers. (See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.)—In Talcott v. Buffalo, 125 N. Y. 286, it was said: "The terms 'waste' and injury, used in this statute [giving a right of action to a taxpayer as against municipal officers], comprehended only illegal, wrongful, or dishonest official acts, and were not intended to subject the official action of boards, officers, or municipal bodies acting within the limits of their jurisdiction and discretion * * * to the supervision of the judicial tribunals." See also dissenting opinion of Gray, J., in Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 367.

Injury to Property.—An injury to property has been defined by the New York Code to be an actionable act whereby the estate of another is lessened, other than a personal injury or the breach of a contract. Whitney v. Hirsch, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 327; Maxson v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 112 N. Y. 563; Stevens v. Cheney, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 3.

"The defendants did nothing to lessen the estate of the plaintiffs, which remains as before, and it was not affected, except as to value, a thing controlled entirely by the fluctuations of the market, which at times rises and falls. The word injury as used in the code is not so elastic as to yield to such a changeable construction." Roome v. Jennings, 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. 361.

In Campion Card, etc., Co. v. Searing, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 237, it was held that fraudulent representations constituted an injury to property. See also Wittner v. Von Minden, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 234; Weiller v. Schreiber, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 175.

Same — Costs. — By an English rule of court, costs were allowed on the "higher scale" in actions for special injunctions to restrain the commission or continuance of waste, nuisances, breach of covenants, injury to property, etc. It was held that an injury to property must be a substantial, physical injury, and did not include trespass on the land without injury to the soil, though of a permanent character and committed in the assertion of title. Goodhand v. Ayscough, 10 Q. B. D. 71. See also Chapman v. Midland R. Co., 5 Q. B. D. 167.

Same — Extortion. (See also the title EXTORTION, vol. 12, p. 576.) — In People v. Hughes, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 8 N. Y. Crim. 448, affirmed 137 N. Y. 29, it was held that an injury to business was an injury to property within the New York statute defining extortion as procuring property by means of fear induced by threats to injure property. See also People v. Barondess, (N. Y. 1892) 31 N. E. Rep. 240.

Injury to Real Property. — In Cox v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 55 Ark. 454, it was held that a suit to restrain the defendant from removing earth from the plaintiff's land was an action for injury to real property. The court said: "The term injury is used in section 4994 [of Mansf. Dig. Ark.] in a technical sense and as meaning every wrong which in legal contemplation is an injury to real property. This embraces not only injuries committed directly and forcibly, for which an action of trespass was the appropriate remedy under the former practice, but such also as nuisances, the obstruction of light or air, diverting watercourses, and other similar wrongs for which the remedy at common law was an action on the case. Of the latter class was permissive waste, which, being a failure to repair, was a mere nonfeasance; and yet it was classed as an injury to real property, and the venue was local. 1 Chitty 144, 268. That an act which is only threatened may be an injury to real property is shown by the statutory provisions affording a remedy in many cases to prevent it."

"Sir William Blackstone, in his Commentaries, distinguishes foreign from inland bills by defining the former as bills drawn by a merchant residing abroad upon his correspondent in England, or vice versa; and the latter as those drawn by one person on another when both drawer and drawee reside within the same kingdom. Chitty, p. 16, and the other writers on bills of exchange are to the same effect." Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 590.

A bill of exchange drawn by one resident of a state upon another resident has been held to be an inland bill of exchange. Kaskaskia Bridge Co. v. Shannon, 6 Ill. 15.

Sounds. — Ordinarily, navigation upon a sound of limited area is inland navigation. Woodhouse v. Cain, 95 N. Car. 114. But Long Island Sound is not an inland water. Providence, etc., Steamship Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co., 109 U. S. 578.

Twelve Miles Out to Sea. — A stipulation contained in a policy of marine insurance in the words, "warranted to navigate only the inland waters of the United States and Canada, and not below the Thousand Islands," was held to be broken where the vessel insured passed out of New York bay and sailed upon the open ocean for a distance of twelve miles from Sandy Hook lighthouse. Cogswell v. Chubb, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 93. See also the title MARINE INSURANCE.

Great Lakes. — In American Transp. Co. v. Moore, 5 Mich. 368, 24 How. (U. S.) 1, it was held that the navigation of the great American lakes and their connecting waters was not inland navigation, within the meaning of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1851, entitled "an act to limit the liability of shipowners and for other purposes."

River. — The War Eagle was a steamer of more than twenty tons burden, duly enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade, and plying on the Mississippi river between the ports of Dubuque, Iowa, and St. Paul, Minnesota, touching at intermediate points. While making one of her regular trips she was burned with her cargo. It was held that she was a vessel engaged in inland navigation, within the meaning of the act above referred to. The War Eagle, 6 Biss. (U. S.) 364. See also Waiker v. Western Transp. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 150.

Prize. — A United States statute provided that no property seized or taken upon any of the inland waters of the United States, by the naval forces thereof, should be regarded as maritime prize. In construing this statute, in Porter v. U. S., 106 U. S. 612, the court said: "The term inland as here used was evidently intended to apply to all waters of the United States upon which a naval force could go, other than bays and harbors on the seacoast. In most instances property of the enemy on them

INMATE. — See note 2.

INNOCENCE. — As to the presumption of innocence, see the title PRESUMPTIONS.

INNOCENT. — See note 3.

INNOCENT AGENT. — An innocent agent is one who does the forbidden thing, moved thereto by another person, yet incurs no legal guilt, because he is either not endowed with sufficient mental capacity or not acquainted with the necessary facts.⁴

INNOCENT CONVEYANCES. — A technical term used to signify those conveyances made by a tenant of his leasehold which do not occasion a forfeiture; could be taken, if at all, by an armed force without the aid of vessels of war. These were seldom required on such waters, except when batteries or fortified places near them were to be attacked in conjunction with the army. As observed by the court in The Cotton Plant [10 Wall. (U. S.) 577], Congress probably anticipated, in view of the state of the war when the act was passed, that most of the captures on the rivers would be made by the army."

1. Inlet. — A statute provided that a corporation should have power to build bridges over navigable streams and inlets, and that every such bridge should contain a draw of sufficient width to admit the passage of vessels. In construing this statute the court said: "The word inlet seems to be used by the statute to denote the indentation in the shore at the mouth or outlet of a navigable stream falling into the Hudson river, and the word 'bay' to describe an indentation or curve where there is no such stream." Tillotson v. Hudson River R. Co., 9 N. Y. 579.

2. Inmate. — By an English statute it was provided that "no inmate, or more families than one, shall dwell in any cottage, on pain that the owner of such cottage placing or suffering such inmate, etc., shall forfeit to the lord of the feef 10s. per mensem. * * * A man is accounted an inmate who, not having sufficient to live of himself by his land, art, or trade, dwells in part of another's house. As if common breakers of hedges, or other idle or suspicious persons, dwell in an house with another. Or if a poor laborer dwells with another, and both go by the same door into the high street. Or if a man, not of ability, take certain rooms in an house. But if a man demise parcel of the house where he dwells, and severs it from the other part, and makes separate doors to the high street, the lessee is not an inmate; for they are two houses. Or if a man take another ad mensam, or to sojourn with him, and he has certain rooms, he is not an inmate. Or if a man take his married daughter with her husband, according to agreement, and suffer them to have certain rooms in his house. Or if he suffer a gentleman to have certain rooms in his house who does not table with him, but goes to a victualler's for his sustenance. Kit. 45 b." Com. Dig., tit. Justices of Peace, B 85.

By the English Public Health Act, 1848, § 69, if any street, not being a highway, be not sewered, leveled, paved, etc., to the satisfaction of the local board of health, such board may, by notice in writing to the respective owners or occupiers of the premises fronting such parts as may require to be sewered, etc., require them to sewer, etc., the same within a time to be specified in such notice; and if such notice be not complied with, the local board may execute the works, and the expenses shall be paid by the owners in default. By section 150 it is provided that in all cases in which any notice to the owner or occupier of any premises is required, the notice shall be served either personally or by delivering it to some inmate of the owner's or occupier's "place of abode." It seems that a place of business is a "place of abode," and a clerk an inmate, within the meaning of the 150th section. Mason v. Bibby, 2 H. & C. 881.

3. Innocent Woman. — The term "innocent woman" employed by Code N. Car., § 1113, making it a misdemeanor to attempt to destroy the reputation of an innocent woman by false declarations in respect to her chastity, means a woman who at the time of the alleged slanderous charge and at the time of the trial thereof was chaste and virtuous. State v. Grigg, 104 N. Car. 882.

In State v. Brown, 100 N. Car. 525, it was said: "Of the instructions asked and refused as well as those given it is only necessary to refer to the cases of State v. Davis, 92 N. Car. 764, and State v. Moody, 98 N. Car. 671, in the first of which it is decided that an 'innocent woman' is one who has never had unlawful sexual commerce with any man, and in the other, that incontinency has the same meaning. These cases cover the whole charge and sustain it fully."

In State v. Hinson, 103 N. Car. 374, it was held that a woman was innocent unless actual coition took place, even though discovered in the arms of the man and interrupted before consummation of the intercourse. And in that case it was held that in an indictment for slandering an innocent woman, under Code N. Car., § 1113, the defendant cannot show, on the plea of not guilty, a prevalent report of sexual intimacy between the prosecutrix and a certain man, the making of a charge of such intimacy being the defamatory matter specified in the indictment, to disprove its wanton and malicious utterance, though he might make such proof, after verdict of guilty, to the court, in extenuation, etc. See generally the title LIBEL AND SLANDER.

2. Innocent Purchaser—Usury. (See also the title USURY.)—A statute provided for the protection of an innocent purchaser to whom the holder of a usurious note sold it. It was held that the term innocent purchaser as used in the statute meant a bona fide indorsee or bearer of the note within the law merchant. Robinson v. Smith, 62 Minn. 64. In that case the court said: "Assuming, then, that the notes were usurious, as between the original parties to them, we reach the vital question in this case, viz., did Morgan take the notes freed from the vice of usury? and, if so, did the plaintiff, by his purchase of them, acquire all of the rights and equities of Morgan in and to the notes, notwithstanding he himself was not a bona fide purchaser of the notes before maturity? The answer depends on the construction to be given to the proviso to G. S. 1894, § 2214, declaring all usurious notes, contracts, and securities void, which reads as follows: 'Nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the purchase of negotiable mercantile paper, usurious or otherwise, for a valuable consideration, by an innocent purchaser, free from all equities, at any price before the maturity of the same, when there has been no intent to evade the provisions of this act, or where said purchase has not been a part of the original usurious transaction. In any case, however, where the original holder of an usurious note sells the same to an innocent purchaser, the maker of said note, or his representatives, shall have the right to recover back from the said original holder the amount of principal and interest paid by him on said note.' Manifestly, this proviso was enacted in view of the fact that negotiable paper enters into the channels of commerce, and constitutes a large addition to the medium of exchange in the business world, and that its free circulation as such medium ought not to be hampered. The statute, therefore, makes no attempt to repeal the law merchant, as to usurious negotiable paper, but expressly provides that after the paper has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser for value, before maturity, it is freed from the vice of usury. The maker has no longer any defense, as against the purchaser; but the law, in such cases, gives him a right to recover from the original holder, who transferred the paper, the amount of the usurious paper he is required to pay. An innocent purchaser, as the term is used in this statute, means a bona fide indorsee or bearer, within the law merchant. Fredin v. Richards, 61 Minn. 490; Rochester First Nat. Bank v. Bentley, 27 Minn. 87. This last case holds that the proviso we are considering intends that the defense of usury may be interposed in an action on negotiable paper only where any other defense, if it exist, might be interposed. Now, it is clear that the defendants in this action could not interpose any other defense against these notes in the hands of the plaintiff. Therefore, they cannot interpose the defense of usury. This conclusion follows from the rule of the law merchant, that one who acquires negotiable paper from a bona fide indorsee or bearer who purchased it for value, before maturity, obtains the title and rights of such indorsee or bearer. Therefore, he will not be affected by the fact that he purchased after maturity of the paper, and with notice of fraud or other vice in the origin of the paper. It would be inconsistent that the law should recognize a perfect title to the paper in an innocent purchaser, yet limit his right to dispose of it. If he cannot transfer the paper, with all the privileges and immunities attaching to it in his hands, to any one he pleases, his title is imperfect; he is deprived of a free market for it. The statute gives the right to an innocent purchaser to acquire negotiable paper, usurious or otherwise, free from all equities; and by his purchase he obtains this immunity, which becomes his property, and he may transfer it to whom he pleases. Bedell v. Herring, 77 Cal. 572, and 11 Am. St. Rep. 322, note; 1 Daniel Neg. Inst., § 803. The question must be answered in the affirmative. The plaintiff, by his purchase from Morgan, acquired the notes free from the defense of usury."

I. WHO ARE INNKEEPERS — 1. Definitions and Explanation of Terms. — An Inn is a house which is held out to the public as a place where all transient persons who come will be received and entertained as guests for compensation.¹

An Innkeeper is defined by some authorities to be a person who makes it his business to entertain travelers and passengers, and provide lodging and necessities for them and their horses and attendants.² But perhaps it is more accurate to say that an innkeeper is one who holds out that he will receive all travelers and sojourners who are willing to pay a price adequate to the sort of accommodation provided, and who come in a situation in which they are fit to be received.³ The chief difference between these two definitions lies in

Best, J., in Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & Ald. 283, 5 E. C. L. 285, defines an inn as "a house, the owner of which holds out that he will receive all travelers and sojourners who are willing to pay a price adequate to the sort of accommodation provided, and who come in a situation in which they are fit to be received." And Bayley, J., in the same case, defines it as "a house where the traveler is furnished with everything which he has occasion for whilst upon his way."

2. Innkeeper Defined. — The definition given in the text is supported by the following authorities: Civil Rights Bill, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 541; Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 73, 48 Am. Dec. 416; St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 593; Story on Bailments, § 475; Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers (B).

An Innkeeper is distinguished from other Traders in that he cannot, as such, be a bankrupt, for, though he buys provisions to be spent in his house, yet he does not properly sell them, but serves them at such rates as he thinks reasonable; and the attendance of his servants, the furniture of his house, etc., are to be considered. The contracts with innkeepers are not for any commodities in specie, but they are contracts for house room, trouble, attendance, lodging, and necessities, and therefore cannot come within the design of the words of the statutes of bankruptcy, since there is no trade carried on of buying and bartering commodities. Newton v. Trigg, 3 Mod. 327, Comb. 181, Carth. 149; Harman v. Clarkson, 22 U. C. C. Pl. 291.

Other Definitions. — Wintermute v. Clark, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 242; Taylor v. Monnot, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 116, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 325.

Keeping a house openly for the entertainment and accommodation of travelers and others, for a reward, is keeping an inn, whether licensed or not, and whether or not liquors or wines are sold there. State v. Stone, 6 Vt. 295.

Estoppel to Deny Character. — Where a person, by the means usually employed in the business of innkeeping, holds himself out to the world as an innkeeper, and in that capacity is accustomed to receive travelers as his guests, and solicits a continuance of their patronage, and a traveler relying on such representations goes to the house to receive such entertainment as he has occasion for, the relation of innkeeper and guest is created, and the innkeeper cannot be heard to say that his professions were false, and that he was not in fact an innkeeper. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 597, 91 Am. Dec. 657.

the omission from the one last given of the element concerning the accommodation of horses. If it was ever necessary to constitute an innkeeper that he should have accommodations for the horses of his guests, it is certainly not the case under the changed conditions of travel in modern times.¹

Explanation of Terms. — The Words "Inn" and "Innkeeper" have a perfectly definite meaning in law, as has already been seen.²

"Tavern," according to the English nomenclature, signifies a place where food and drink, without lodgings, may be obtained, and therefore it does not include the idea of an inn.³ In the United States, however, the distinction found in England is not generally observed, but the words "tavern" and "inn" are ordinarily used synonymously.⁴

"Hotel" is a comparatively modern word, signifying the same as the word "inn," which in recent times has fallen into disuse.⁵

2. Essential Characteristics — a. ACCOMMODATIONS FOR GUESTS. — To constitute an inn, there must be some provision for the essential needs of a traveler on his journey, viz., lodging, as well as food. These two elements of an inn may doubtless be present in very disproportionate degrees, as the needs of the situation may require; but both must in some degree be present to constitute an inn.⁶

Duty to Receive All Comers. — The business of an innkeeper is viewed by the law as a public employment,⁷ and accordingly, one of the distinguishing characteristics of that business is the obligation to receive and entertain, as guests, all who choose to visit the house.⁸ In this lies the distinction between an inn-

1. Accommodations for Horses. — See infra, this section, Essential Characteristics.

2. See supra, this section, Definitions and Explanation of Terms.

3. Tavern — Meaning of Term in England. — Reg. v. Kymmer, 2 Q. B. D. 136; Smith v. Scott, 2 Moo. & S. 35; Schouler on Bailments and Carriers, (2d ed.), § 277.

"A tavern is a place where wine is sold and drinkers are entertained." Johnson's Dict., quoted in State v. Chamblyss, Cheves L. (S. Car.) 220, 34 Am. Dec. 593.

4. "Tavern" and "Inn" Considered Synonymous in United States. — Foster v. State, 84 Ala. 451; Bonner v. Wilborn, 7 Ga. 296; Com. v. Shortridge, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 640; St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 593; Overseers of Poor v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150; People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311; State v. Chamblyss, Cheves L. (S. Car.) 220, 34 Am. Dec. 593.

The Term "Tavern Keeper" in Kentucky has a technical meaning and special application, and the peculiar privilege of retaining the goods of the guests until their charges for lodging, etc., are paid is confined to the keeper of a tavern or inn. Southwood v. Myers, 3 Bush (N. Y.) 682.

The Terms "Inn, Tavern, or Hotel," employed in an act respecting the granting of licenses to sell intoxicating liquors, are considered to be "used synonymously to designate what is ordinarily and popularly known as an inn or tavern, or place for the entertainment of travelers, and where all their wants can be supplied." People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311.

The Century Dictionary defines a tavern as "a public house where wines and other liquors are sold, and where food is provided for travelers and other guests; a public house where both food and drink are supplied; an inn." See also Webster's Dictionary, Worcester's Dictionary, and the various law dictionaries.

5. "Hotel" and "Inn" Synonymous. — Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198; St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 593; Taylor v. Monnot, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 116; People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311.

Origin and History of Term "Hotel." — In Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 15, it is said that the word "hotel" is of French origin, being derived from hostel, which in turn came from the Latin hostis, and was introduced into England about the year 1760, and came into use in the United States about 1797. In this case Judge Daly, in a learned and scholarly opinion, traces the history and etymology of the word from the earliest times to its introduction and use in English and American law.

6. Accommodations for Guests — Provision Must Be Made for Lodgings. — Lewis v. Hitchcock, 10 Fed. Rep. 4.

The proposition stated in the text is also sustained by the definitions of the words "inn" and "innkeeper," given above.

A Hotel Conducted on the European Plan, that is, where the charge per day includes only lodging and service, and the guests take their meals à la carte, at the attached restaurant, or wherever they please, and pay for them separately, is an inn within the legal meaning of the word. Bullock v. Adair, 63 Ill. App. 30; Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 200; Bernstein v. Sweeny, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 271.

7. Business of Innkeeper Considered a Public Employment. — Hall v. State, 4 Harr. (Del.) 132. See also infra, this title, Statutory Regulation.

keeper and the keeper of a boarding house.¹

b. ACCOMMODATIONS FOR HORSES.—Whatever may have been the rule in early times, it is now well settled that a man may be an innkeeper, and liable as such, though he has no provision for the accommodation of horses;² but if he assumes to furnish stabling, it must be safe, and he is liable for the loss of or injury to the horses of his guests to the same extent that he is liable for other effects brought to the inn by guests.³

c. MUST BE REGULAR BUSINESS.—One of the essential characteristics of keeping an inn is that it shall be the regular business of the person so engaged, and it is not sufficient that he sometimes furnishes travelers with the accommodations of an inn;⁴ but it is not necessary that innkeeping should be his exclusive occupation,⁵ nor does the fact that he is engaged in another kind of business, which he conducts in connection with his inn for the convenience or pleasure of his guests, impose on him the liabilities of an innkeeper with reference to such other business.⁶

d. NECESSITY OF LICENSE.—The right to keep an inn is not a franchise, and therefore, in the absence of any statute on the subject, any person may keep such a house without obtaining a license to do so;⁷ but he cannot

2. Accommodations for Horses Not Necessary.—Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & Ald. 283, 5 E. C. L. 285; Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 74, 48 Am. Dec. 416; Com. v. Wetherbee, 101 Mass. 214.

3. Stabling When Furnished Must Be Safe.—Dickerson v. Rogers, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 179, 40 Am. Dec. 642. See also infra, this title, Liability in Respect to Effects of Guests.

4. Innkeeper Must Be Regularly Engaged in Business of Keeping an Inn.—Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 74, 48 Am. Dec. 416; Lyon v. Smith, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 184; State v. Mathews, 2 Dev. & B. L. (19 N. Car.) 424.

Thus, Farmers Who Occasionally Entertain Travelers are not liable as innkeepers; but where a man had a house on the highroad much visited by travelers, who were uniformly entertained and charged, and these facts were notorious and relied on by travelers, while on the other hand he often declared that he did not keep an inn, refused to take boarders, and often entertained his friends and countrymen free of charge, it was held that, though he lived in a sparsely settled country, the jury, on this evidence, might find him an innkeeper. Howth v. Franklin, 20 Tex. 798, 73 Am. Dec. 218.

And the Occasional Entertainment of Travelers by a Boarding-house Keeper does not constitute him an innkeeper. Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 75, 48 Am. Dec. 416.

Proprietary Interest Required.—The salaried manager of a hotel belonging to a company is not an innkeeper so as to be by law responsible for the goods and property of the guests, although the usual license under 1 Geo. IV., c. 61, has been granted to him personally. Dixon v. Birch, 42 L. J. Exch. 135, L. R. 8 Exch. 135, 28 L. T. N. S. 360, 21 W. R. 443.

5. Exclusive Occupation as Innkeeper Not Required.—A man may be an innkeeper though he keeps an inn imperfectly, or combines that employment with others. If he is prepared and holds himself out to the public as ready to entertain travelers, strangers, and transient guests, with their teams and carriages, after the manner usual with innkeepers, he is an innkeeper, though he may sometimes make special bargains with his customers, may not keep his house open in the night, and may not keep the stable at which he puts up the horses of those who stop with him at his house. Com. v. Wetherbee, 101 Mass. 214.

6. Business Conducted in Connection with Inn.—Minor v. Staples, 71 Me. 316, 36 Am. Dec. 318.

7. Right to Keep an Inn Not a Franchise.—Overseers of Poor v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150.

License Not Necessary unless Required by Statute.—Foster v. State, 84 Ala. 451; Lyon v. Smith, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 184; Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 163; Overseers of Poor v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. The possession of a license does not make a person an innholder, nor the want of it prevent him from being one, at common law. Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 163.

Any person has a right at common law to keep an inn, and to put up a sign indicating his business; he only requires a license to authorize the sale of liquors, and if his sign does not indicate that he keeps a licensed tavern, he is not thereby subjected to the penalty therefor. Overseers of Poor v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150.

License Required by Statute.—In some jurisdictions no person can keep an inn or house of entertainment unless he is duly licensed by the proper authorities. Bostick v. State, 47 Ark. 126; Braswell v. Com., 5 Bush (Ky.) 545; Randall v. Tuell, 89 Me. 443; State v. Wynne, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 451; State v. Stone, 6 Vt. 295.

An early statute in Tennessee required a license to conduct an inn, but this was repealed by the Acts of 1837-38. Dickerson v. Rogers, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 179, 40 Am. Dec. 642.

In North Carolina a license was required by an Act passed in 1798. State v. Wynne, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 451.

furnish his guests with intoxicating liquors as a part of their entertainment, without first obtaining a liquor license in compliance with the excise laws.¹ Even where the law requires an innkeeper to obtain a license, his failure to do so will not protect him from the responsibilities of the occupation, if in fact he exercises it, though he would probably be denied the corresponding rights and privileges.²

e. NECESSITY OF SIGN. — In order to constitute a person an innkeeper, it is not necessary that he should exhibit a sign indicating his occupation as such.³ It is sufficient if he, by words, acts, or otherwise, holds himself out to the public as a common innkeeper.⁴

f. SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS. — The retailing of intoxicating liquors in a building will not constitute it an inn if it does not otherwise possess the requisite characteristics,⁵ though a bar is an almost invariable incident to the business;⁶ nor is it necessary to constitute an inn that liquors should be supplied to the guests, though this is usually done.⁷ Neither will serving a free lunch at the bar, or the occasional bringing of victuals from a neighboring restaurant, transform a drinking saloon into a hotel.⁸

The privilege of selling spirituous liquors is not implied or embraced in a license to keep a tavern. Hoglan v. Com., 3 Bush (Ky.) 147; Com. v. Jordan, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 228.

The New York statute of 1857 absolutely prohibits the granting of a license to any person to sell strong and spirituous liquors to be drunk on his premises, "unless such person proposes to keep an inn, tavern, or hotel, and unless the commissioners are satisfied that the applicant is of good moral character; that he has sufficient ability to keep an inn, tavern, or hotel, and the necessary accommodations to entertain travelers at the place where such applicant resides or proposes to keep the same."

* * * The terms 'inn, tavern, or hotel,' mentioned in the statute, are used synonymously, to designate what is ordinarily and popularly known as an inn or tavern, or place for the entertainment of travelers, and where all their wants can be supplied. The words 'inn or tavern' were so used in the prior corresponding enactments." People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311; Kelly v. Excise Com'rs, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 327.

Formerly a tavern license in Kentucky included the right to sell intoxicating liquors. Louisville v. Kean, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 14; Com. v. Kamp, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 309. And the rule was the same in South Carolina. State v. Chambliss, Cheves L. (S. Car.) 220, 34 Am. Dec. 593.

2. Failure to Obtain License When Required by Law — Liabilities Not Affected. — See State v. Wynne, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 451; Dickerson v. Rogers, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 179, 40 Am. Dec. 642.

Remedies Not Available without License. — If a tavern keeper fails to take out a license as required by law he cannot sue for damage done him as a tavern keeper. Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296. See also Randall v. Tuell, 89 Me. 443.

A Refreshment Bar Attached to a Hotel, but entered from the street by a separate door, is not an inn. Reg. v. Rymer, 2 Q. B. D. 136, 46 L. J. M. C. 108, 13 Cox C. C. 378, 35 L. T. N. S. 774, 25 W. R. 415.

6. As to the right to sell intoxicating liquors, see supra, this section, Necessity of License.

Bar-room in Separate Building. — A tavern keeper, duly licensed to sell intoxicating liquors, may have his bar-room in an apartment which is not connected by any doorway with his main building, but separated from it, and may there retail spirituous liquors by himself or partner, without a violation of law, provided this separate bar-room constitutes, in good faith, a part of the tavern, and the license is not used as a fraudulent shield for a drinking room such as is commonly called a grocery. Gray v. Com., 9 Dana (Ky.) 300, 25 Am. Dec. 136.

and lodgings for his boarders, he is not an innkeeper,¹ nor is he fixed with that character by the fact that he occasionally entertains travelers.² The two classes of persons are clearly distinguishable.³ There is nothing inconsistent or unusual, however, in a house of public entertainment having a double character, being simultaneously a boarding house and an inn. With respect to those who occupy rooms and are entertained on a special contract, it may be a boarding house; and in respect to transient persons, who without a stipulated contract remain from day to day, it is an inn.⁴ Neither does the fact that a house is not immediately on a highway, and that the grounds on which it stands are inclosed and the gates closed at night, render it any less an inn, or convert it into a boarding house.⁵

b. KEEPERS OF HOTELS AT SUMMER RESORTS OR WATERING PLACES.—The keeper of a hotel at a summer resort or watering place, for the board, lodging, and entertainment of the visitors, is not an innkeeper, because there is wanting the essential characteristic that innkeepers entertain from day to day on an implied contract, while the keeper of a hotel of the sort mentioned above receives his guests under an express contract for a certain time and at a certain rate.⁶

1. Keeper of Boarding House Not an Innkeeper.—Dansy v. Richardson, 3 El. & Bl. 144, 77 E. C. L. 144; Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 500; Southwood v. Myers, 3 Bush (Ky.) 682; Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 15, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 26; Swann v. Smith, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 114.

One who lets out rooms to lodgers, not supplying them with meals, and leases the basement to another person, who keeps a restaurant as an independent establishment, from which access may be had to the lodging rooms, is not an innkeeper, and has no lien as such upon the property of his lodgers. Cochrane v. Schryver, 12 Daly (N. Y.) 174, 17 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 442.

2. Occasional Entertainment of Travelers by Boarding-house Keeper.—Kisten v. Hildebrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 75, 48 Am. Dec. 416.

3. The Distinction as to the Nature of the Occupation, between an innkeeper and the keeper of a private boarding house or lodging house, lies in this, that the latter is at liberty to choose his guests, while an innkeeper is pledged to entertain all travelers of good conduct and means of payment, and furnish them everything which they have occasion for as such travelers on their way. Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 254; Beall v. Beck, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 666; Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657.

"The fact that the house is open for the public, that those who patronize it come to it upon the invitation which is extended to the general public, and without any previous agreement for accommodation or agreement as to the duration of their stay, marks the important distinction between a hotel or inn and a boarding house." Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198.

In Willard v. Reinhardt, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 148, it was said that the distinction between a boarding house and an inn is that in the former the guest is under an express contract for a certain time at a certain rate; in the latter the guest is entertained from day to day upon an implied contract.

See also Bostick v. State, 47 Ark. 126, in which it is said that a boarding house is a house "where the boarder is selected and received into the house upon an express contract for a certain period of time."

In Regard to Liabilities there is an important distinction between the two classes of persons, in that an innkeeper is held to a very rigorous rule of liability for the goods of his guests, while a boarding-house keeper is liable, in that regard, only as an ordinary bailee. See infra, this title, subdiv. Liability in Respect to Effects of Guests—Requisites of Liability—Existence of Relation of Innkeeper and Guest.

Lien on Effects of Guests.—Another distinguishing feature is that an innkeeper has, at common law, a lien for his charges on all the effects of his guests within the inn, while a boarding-house keeper has such remedy only when it is given by statute. See infra, this title, subdiv. Securing and Enforcing Right to Compensation.

4. Innkeeper May Also Be Boarding-house Keeper.—Foster v. State, 84 Ala. 451; Haff v. Adams, (Ariz. 1899) 59 Pac. Rep. 111; Bullock v. Adair, 63 Ill. App. 30, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 18; Lusk v. Belote, 22 Minn. 468; Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 15; Lawrence v. Howard, 1 Utah 143.

5. Inn Need Not Be Situated on Highway.—Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198.

6. Keeper of Hotel at Summer Resort, etc., Held Not to Be an Innkeeper.—Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 254; Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 500; Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 296; Southwood v. Myers, 3 Bush (Ky.) 681.

In Parker v. Flint, 12 Mod. 254, it appeared that the plaintiff let lodgings at Epsom, during the season for drinking the waters, to such as went thither for that purpose, or for the air, or for their pleasure, and did dress victuals for them, and did sell them ale and beer, and entertain their horses at eight pence per diem, but sold no victuals, drink, etc., to any but the lodgers. It was held that his house was not an inn, because he was not compellable to entertain anybody, and none could come there without a previous contract; he was not bound

c. KEEPERS OF RESTAURANTS AND CAFES. — The keeper of a restaurant or cafe, so far as those terms are used to designate a mere eating house, where no provision is made for lodging the guest, is not an innkeeper,¹ though his obligations as regards the effects of guests are somewhat similar.² But a restaurant keeper may also be an innkeeper, and he may establish the last-named character by his own acts and declarations so that he cannot afterwards deny it.³

d. SLEEPING CAR AND STEAMBOAT COMPANIES. — While the analogy between an inn and a sleeping car or a steamboat is a strong one, and the rigid responsibility which was imposed on innkeepers at an early period when passengers traveled by coach or on horseback, making frequent stops at houses of public entertainment, whose proprietors often colluded with thieves and highwaymen to plunder their guests, is still enforced against that class of persons, the tendency of modern legislation and judicial opinion has been to limit it strictly to them. It is accordingly held, almost without exception, that sleeping car companies and the proprietors of steamboats are not innkeepers, and therefore are not subject to the same measure of responsibility in regard to their passengers' effects.⁴

to sell at reasonable rates, or to protect his guest. To the same effect is Parkhurst v. Foster, 1 Ld. Raym. 479, Carth. 417, 1 Salk. 388.

1. Keeper of Restaurant Not an Innkeeper. — Blum v. Southern Pullman Palace Car Co., 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 500; Sheffer v. Willoughby, 61 Ill. App. 263, affirmed 163 Ill. 518, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483; Carpenter v. Taylor, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 193; People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311; Montgomery v. Ladjing, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 61 N. Y. Supp. 840; Kelly v. Excise Com'rs, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 329.

The term "restaurant" has no definite legal meaning. As currently understood it doubtless means only or chiefly an eating-house. But not infrequently a bar forms a part of it; sometimes lodging in addition. And it is also just as currently understood that in numerous resorts termed "restaurants" some lodgings for travelers are provided, or alleged to be provided, so as to obtain the license for the sale of liquors allowed under the excise law to hotels, taverns, or inns only. A restaurant may be an inn or it may not be, according to its real character. The name by which it goes is of little or no account, and the court cannot say judicially that a place described in a complaint as "a certain inn, to wit, a restaurant at No. 9 Chatham street," may not be an inn. Lewis v. Hitchcock, 10 Fed. Rep. 4.

A Mere Coffee-house is not an inn. Doe v. Laming, 4 Campb. 77.

Obligations of Restaurant Keeper Similar to Those of Innkeeper. — Dunn v. Beau, 11 Quebec Super. Ct. 538.

In Ultzen v. Nicols, 63 L. J. Q. B. 289, (1894) 1 Q. B. 92, 10 Reports 13, 70 L. T. N. S. 140, 42 W. R. 58, 58 J. P. 103, the plaintiff went into the defendant's restaurant for the purpose of dining. His overcoat was received by the waiter at the table, and, without any directions, hung up on a peg in the room. The coat was stolen. It was held that the jury was justified in finding that there was a bailment and such negligence as rendered the defendant liable.

3. Character as Innkeeper Established by Acts and Declarations. — In Kopper v. Willis, 9 Daly

(N. Y.) 460, the defendant was engaged in keeping a restaurant on the lower floor of a building occupied by him. Only a half of one floor was prepared for lodgers. The defendant's entire business was carried on under a liquor license obtained by him on an affidavit that he kept an inn, and that an inn was necessary to the accommodation of travelers in the place where he kept it. It was held that the defendant, by his own act and declaration, had established the fact that he kept an inn, and hence his liability to a person who lost property in the inn, while there in the character of a guest, attached, no matter how slight the entertainment might be, nor how temporarily the use made of it, and that the character of the party as a guest was not affected by the fact that his entertainment was paid for by a friend who invited him to go to the place. 4. Evidence. — A sign displayed on a building, indicating that it is a common inn, is obviously evidence that the building is such in fact and that the proprietor is an innkeeper, but a sign is not necessary to prove that fact.¹ It may also be shown by the acts or declarations of the party,² or by any other facts or circumstances indicating that he is engaged in such business.³

5. Who May Keep an Inn. — It has already been observed that the right to keep an inn is not a franchise, and therefore requires no license or grant of authority at common law, but that it is an occupation in which any person may engage, in the absence of statutory regulations.⁴ At the present day, however,

A passenger on entering a sleeping car as a guest — because that is what he is in fact — necessarily must take his ordinary wearing apparel with him, and some articles for convenience, comfort, or necessity. The articles, when placed in the care of the company's employees, are infra hospitium, and are at the company's risk."

2. Acts and Declarations of Party. — Howth v. Franklin, 20 Tex. 798, 73 Am. Dec. 218.

3. Facts and Circumstances Indicating Occupation. — In Bostick v. State, 47 Ark. 126, the defendant's house was advertised by a sign attached to it bearing the inscription "Webb House," and also in the newspapers by a card announcing its location and stating that the house was open for the accommodation of the public on very reasonable terms. It was held that the evidence tended to prove that the house was a public house, intended for the reception and entertainment of all comers, and was not a mere boarding house.

In Stringer v. Davis, 35 Cal. 25, it was held, on the trial of the issue whether a certain house was a hotel, that the publication by the proprietors of an advertisement of the house, as such, in the newspapers of the neighborhood, was competent evidence to show such character.

In Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198, the defendant's house was called the "Hotel del Monte." The evidence showed that it was open to all persons having a right to demand entertainment at a public house; that it solicited public patronage by advertising, and in the distribution of its business cards, and kept a public register in which its guests entered their names on their arrival and before they were assigned rooms; that the hotel, at its own expense, ran a coach to the railroad station for the purpose of conveying its patrons to and from the hotel; and that it had a manager, clerks, waiters, and in its interior management all the ordinary arrangements and appearances of a hotel, and the prices charged were for board and lodging. It was held that these facts were sufficient to justify a finding that the defendant was an innkeeper.

In Wintermute v. Clark, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 242, it was said that in order to charge the defendant as an innkeeper, it was not necessary to prove that it was only for the reception of travelers that his house was kept open, but that it was sufficient to prove that all who came were received as guests, without any previous agreement as to the duration of their stay or the terms of their entertainment.

4. Right to Keep an Inn Not a Franchise. — See supra, this section, Essential Characteristics — Necessity of License.

Any Person has a right, at common law, to keep an inn. Overseers of Poor v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150, 2 Hawks P. C. 452.

"It seems to be agreed at this day that any person may set up a new inn, unless it be inconvenient to the public, in respect of its situation, or to its increasing the number of inns, not only to the prejudice of the public, but also to the hindrance and prejudice of other ancient and well-governed inns; for the keeping of an inn is no franchise, but a lawful trade, open to every subject, and therefore there is no need of any license from the king for that purpose." Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers (A).

A Corporation having engaged in that occupation and assumed the liability of an innkeeper towards a guest, and received from him the consideration for such liability, cannot, in an action against it to recover damages for personal property destroyed by fire, plead that its acts as an innkeeper are ultra vires because under its corporate powers it was not authorized to engage in such occupation. Magee v. Pacific Imp. Co., 98 Cal. 678, 35 Am. St. Rep. 199.

the matter is generally subject to statutory regulation, and licenses are required in both England and the United States.¹

II. STATUTORY REGULATION — 1. In General. — The occupation of an innkeeper is of a public character to the extent that he is obliged to receive and entertain all persons who may come as guests in a proper manner and at suitable times, so long as he has the means of accommodation for them.² This being the nature of the business, it is not within the general rule that the individual may deal with some persons at his option, and refuse to deal with others. The matter is therefore subject to regulation by statute, as being within the police power of the state.³

2. License. — In England and generally in the United States a license is required by statute to carry on the business of keeping an inn.⁴ The statutes prescribe by whom such licenses shall be granted, and these are usually the local county authorities;⁵ and provision is generally made for keeping the

The Power to Regulate Hotels, given to municipal corporations by the Arkansas statute of March 9, 1875, includes the power to license as a means of regulating them. Russellville v. White, 41 Ark. 485. This statute is not exclusive, or inconsistent with the statute requiring all persons keeping public taverns to procure license from the County Court. State v. Sumpter, 53 Ark. 342.

Designation of House. — A tavern license should designate the house where the tavern is to be kept, and will not serve for any other house. Barnes v. Com., 2 Dana (Ky.) 388.

The applicant need not, at the time of the application, be an inhabitant of the house in which the inn is proposed to be kept. Amerman v. Hill, 52 N. J. L. 326.

More than One Person May Be Licensed to keep an inn under the New Jersey statute. Amerman v. Hill, 52 N. J. L. 326.

A Tavern License Confers a Personal Privilege on the person to whom it is granted. It is not transferable, and does not pass with a lease of the house in which the tavern is kept. Com. v. Bryan, 9 Dana (Ky.) 310; Com. v. Brannan, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 374. But there is nothing illegal in an agreement to transfer a license to keep an inn, though the license after its transfer will be inoperative. Hoagland v. Hall, 38 N. J. L. 350.

5. Who Authorized to Grant Licenses. — The business out of improper hands, by committing the matter to the discretion of the licensing authorities,¹ and by providing for the revocation of licenses for cause;² but no restraints can be imposed on the persons licensed except such as are authorized by the statute.³

The Enforcement of the License Laws is usually effected by means of pecuniary penalties, or by making the failure to obtain a license a misdemeanor;⁴ and, even in the absence of such statutory pains and penalties, a person who assumes to be an innkeeper without a license, when one is required by law, is not entitled to an innkeeper's rights and privileges, though he becomes subject to all the liabilities.⁵

A Bond is also required in some jurisdictions to secure compliance with the law.⁶

3. Fire Escapes. — Recent statutes in many jurisdictions provide that hotels shall be furnished with fire escapes, in order to protect the guests from the risk of injury or loss of life, in case the ordinary modes of exit are cut off by fire.⁷ The constitutionality of these enactments, so wise and salutary, in view of the great height of modern hotel buildings, and the disasters which have frequently occurred, has often been sustained.⁸

4. Provisions for Lodging Guests. — In some jurisdictions the statutes pro-authorities to whom is committed the power to grant licenses must be ascertained in each jurisdiction by reference to the local statutes.

1. Discretionary Power as to Granting Licenses. — Nepp v. Com., 2 Dav. (Ky.) 546; Pierce v. Com., 10 Bush (Ky.) 7; Dufford v. Nolan, 46 N. J. L. 87.

The discretionary power to refuse a license must not be exercised in an arbitrary manner. Louisville v. Kean, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 11; Hoglan v. Com., 3 Bush (Ky.) 147. And it does not include the right to refuse altogether to license any taverns. Louisville v. Kean, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 11.

Mandamus will lie to review the action of the commissioners in refusing to grant a license under the New York statute. People v. Woodman, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 20.

Remonstrances Against Granting License. — Remonstrances against granting licenses to keep inns and taverns, under the New Jersey statute, may present special facts affecting the jurisdiction of the city council under the charter, and, if refused a hearing at a time and place within the discretion of the council, such facts may be shown on certiorari to defeat licenses granted. Austin v. Atlantic City, 48 N. J. L. 118. See also Ferguson v. Atlantic City, (N. J. 1899) 42 Atl. Rep. 747.

2. Revocation of Licenses. — Com. v. Graves, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 34; State v. Lamos, 26 Me. 258; Lantz v. Highstown, 46 N. J. L. 102.

Revocation of License Must Be by a Direct Proceeding. — Com. v. Graves, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 34.

The Jurisdiction of the licensing board, in revoking a license under the statute, must appear affirmatively, and cannot be presumed or inferred. State v. Lamos, 26 Me. 258.

Suspension of License. — A license may be suspended for violation of the law, but a suspension is a nullity, unless the alleged offender has been summoned to appear at a time and place designated to show cause. Plummer v. Com., 1 Bush (Ky.) 26.

3. May Impose No Restraints Not Authorized by Statute. — Crosby v. Snow, 16 Me. 121.

4. Failure to Obtain License Made Misdemeanor by Statute. — Bostick v. State, 47 Ark. 126; State v. Sumpter, 53 Ark. 342; State v. Fletcher, 5 N. H. 257. See also Overseers of Poor v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150.

The statutory provisions on this subject vary in the different jurisdictions, but are usually so explicit in terms as to leave little or nothing for judicial interpretation, and reference must be had to the local statutes in each jurisdiction.

5. Failure to Obtain License — Effect in Absence of Statutory Penalties. — See supra, this title, Essential Characteristics — Necessity of License.

6. The North Carolina Statute provides that every person wishing to keep a common inn, tavern, or ordinary, for the entertainment of travelers and others, shall apply to the board of county commissioners for a license to do so, "and the applicant must give bond in the sum of one thousand dollars, payable to the state of North Carolina," and conditioned for finding and providing good and wholesome diet and lodgings for his guests, and stable and provender for their horses; and also to safely keep for his guests all such articles and property as may come to his care and charge as an innkeeper; and on breach of any condition thereof, any person injured may put the same in suit. Civil Rights Bill, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 541.

Judgment on Bond — Effect as to Surety. — Where a licensed tavern keeper has been fined for breach of his bond, his surety, not being a party to the proceeding, is not concluded by the judgment. Margoley v. Com., 3 Met. (Ky.) 405.

7. Fire Escapes Required by Statute. — Department of Buildings v. Field, 12 N. Y. App. Div. 258; People v. Pierson, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 450. See also the various local codes and statutes in the United States.

The Principal English Statutes on the subject are 38 & 39 Vict., c. 55; 41 & 42 Vict., c. 32; 53 & 54 Vict., c. 59; 56 & 57 Vict., cc. 15, 221; 58 & 59 Vict., c. 28.

8. Constitutionality of Fire Escape Laws. — See the title FIRE ESCAPES, vol. 13, p. 82.

vide that every inn shall contain not less than a designated number of beds, etc., for the accommodation of guests.¹

5. Official Inspection. — There are also statutes which require lodging houses to be inspected by official authority before any lodgers may be received thereat.²

III. WHO ARE GUESTS — 1. Definition. — The word "guest" has frequently been defined by various judges and text writers with more or less completeness.³ The sum of all these definitions seems to be that a guest is a transient person who resorts to, and is received at, an inn for the purpose of obtaining the accommodations which it purports to afford.⁴

2. Who May Become a Guest. — It has often been laid down, especially in the older cases, that in order to constitute a person a guest he must be a traveler or wayfarer;⁵ but it is doubtful whether it was ever intended to lay any stress on the term.⁶ However that may be, the more recent cases do not take such a restricted view as to what constitutes a guest at an inn. On the contrary, they expressly hold that a guest is a person who uses the inn either for a temporary or a more permanent stay, in order to take what the inn can give, regardless of whether he comes from a distance or lives in the immediate vicinity.⁷

1. Minimum Limit of Accommodations Prescribed by Statute. — Overseers of Poor v. Warner, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 150. See also the statutes in other jurisdictions.

2. The English Statute provides that "a person shall not keep a common lodging-house or receive a lodger therein until the house has been inspected and approved for that purpose by some officer appointed in that behalf by the local authority, and has been registered." But it is held that this statute does not apply to a house which is maintained as a charitable institution and not for the purposes of gain. Booth v. Ferrett, 25 Q. B. D. 87.

3. Guest Defined. — "A guest is one who patronizes an inn as such." Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183.

A guest is a wayfarer who stops at an inn and is accepted. Manning v. Wells, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 746, 51 Am. Dec. 688.

"Any one away from home, receiving accommodations at an inn as a traveler, is a guest." Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe, 28 Neb. 239, 26 Am. St. Rep. 325.

The Guest Comes Without Any Bargain for time, remains without one, and may go when he pleases, paying only for the actual entertainment received; and the rule is not changed by the fact that the person remains a long time in the inn in this way. Shoecraft v. Bailey, 25 Iowa 553, quoted in Metzger v. Schnabel, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 698; 2 Parsons on Contracts 151.

The Massachusetts Statute (Pub. Stat. Mass. 1882, c. 100, § 9, cl. 2) limits the word "guest" to persons who resort to the house for food or lodging. Com. v. Hagan, 140 Mass. 239.

5. Use of Terms "Traveler" and "Wayfarer" — England. — Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 306; Dawson v. Chamney, 5 Q. B. 164, 48 E. C. L. 164; Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32 (in which it was said that inns were instituted for "passengers and wayfaring men"); Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & Ald. 283, 5 E. C. L. 285 (defining an inn as a house where the "traveler" is furnished all he has occasion for while on the way); Beedle v. Morris, Cro. Jac. 224 (holding that the custom of the realm respecting the liability of innkeepers "is only for travelers").

See also Bouvier's Law Dictionary, defining an innkeeper as "the keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travelers and passengers."

The words "travelers," "wayfarers," and "passengers" are also used in this connection by the following authorities: Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers, (B), (C); Wharton on Innkeepers 75, 76; Edwards on Bailments, § 450. Willcock on Inns 47.

6. Special Significance of Term "Traveler" Doubted. — In Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183, Carpenter, J., referring to the definition of an inn given in Thompson v. Lacy, 3 B. & Ald. 283, 5 E. C. L. 285, said that he did "not suppose that the court intended, in the definition above quoted, to lay stress upon the word 'traveler.'"

7. Persons Not Travelers May Become Guests. — Orchard v. Bush, (1898) 2 Q. B. 284, 67 L. J. Q. B. 650, 78 L. T. N. S. 557, 46 W. R. 527.

In Walling v. Potter, 35 Conn. 183, 9 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 618, the defendant kept an inn in the town of Kent. The plaintiff resided in the same town, about half a mile from the defendant's inn. One evening the plaintiff came to the inn, stayed over night and took breakfast there, paying the defendant his usual charge for a night's lodging and breakfast. On these facts it was held that the plaintiff was a guest, and that the defendant was liable to him as an innkeeper for money stolen during the night. In a note to the report of this case in 9 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 618, it is said that "where one lives in the same town, he cannot compel the innkeeper to receive him as a guest;" but there does not seem to be any authority to the statement unless the definition given in Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32, that "it [the inn] ought to

But It Is Essential that a Party Should Be a Transient, that is, that he should come to the inn for a more or less temporary stay.¹ And if he is a transient, he may become a guest, in the legal sense of the word, notwithstanding an express contract between him and the innkeeper fixing the amount to be paid,² though it has been laid down as one of the distinctive features of the relation, that a guest is received under an implied contract.³

3. What Constitutes the Relation — a. IN GENERAL. — To a certain extent, the definition of a guest already given is descriptive of the circumstances which will operate to constitute the relation of innkeeper and guest, for the purpose of conferring the rights or imposing the liabilities which the law be a common inn," for "passengers" and not for "neighbors."

"It is not wayfarers alone, or travelers from a distance, that at the present day give character to an inn, the point being rather that people resort to the house habitually, no matter whence coming or whither going, as for transient lodging and entertainment." Schouler on Bailments (2d ed.), § 276.

See also Arcade Hotel Co. v. Wiatt, 44 Ohio St. 32, where the question whether a person who is a resident and householder in a city, and not in any sense a traveler, is capable of becoming a guest at a hotel in that city, so as to charge the proprietor with the safekeeping of his property, was raised but not decided.

A Person Who Furnishes a Room in a Hotel and Lives There During Two Months cannot be considered a "traveler," and therefore the innkeeper has no action for intoxicating liquors furnished to him. Ferguson v. Riendeau, 2 Montreal Super. Ct. 136.

Persons Belonging to the Army or Navy, who have no permanent residence they can call home, are to be regarded as travelers when stopping at public inns. Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 112, affirming 17 Hun (N. Y.) 279. See also Metzger v. Schnabel, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 698, in which it was held that a foreign army officer, temporarily in the United States, was a guest at the defendant's hotel, where he had a room, though he rented the room by the week at a stipulated price.

Railroad Conductors. — In Horner v. Harvey, 3 N. Mex. 197, the plaintiff was a railroad conductor. At one end of his route he rented a room at a hotel, by the month, for his use when at that end. It was held that he was not a transient, and therefore did not occupy the relation of guest to the proprietor of the hotel.

The Prominent Idea is that a guest must be a traveler, wayfarer, or transient coming to an inn for lodging and entertainment. It is not now deemed essential that a person should have come from a distance to constitute a guest. Distance is not material; a townsman or neighbor may be a traveler, and therefore a guest at an inn, as well as he who comes from a distance or from a foreign country. Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 4, 53 Am. Rep. 242. See also Meacham v. Galloway, 102 Tenn. 415, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. LAW (1st ed.) 13.

Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 112, affirming 17 Hun (N. Y.) 279, probably carries the doctrine under discussion further than any other case. Here the plaintiff went to the defendant's hotel, pursuant to an agreement made by her husband, General Hancock, of the United States Army, for the board of himself and family, including the plaintiff, at a certain price per month, from November until the following spring or summer, if everything should be satisfactory, unless he should be sooner ordered away on military duty. It was contended that under this agreement the defendants did not receive the plaintiff into their hotel as a guest, but as a permanent boarder. The court, however, held to the contrary.

attaches to that relation. But this definition is very general in its terms, and a further consideration of the subject is necessary to ascertain precisely what constitutes the relation.¹

It is Considered a Question of Fact to be determined on all the evidence, whether, in any case, the relation of innkeeper and guest exists,² or, speaking more precisely, a mixed question of law and fact, because, if the facts are definitely ascertainable from the undisputed evidence, the question then becomes one for the determination of the court.³

b. NECESSITY OF PERSONAL PRESENCE — (1) Property Taken to Inn by Owner's Servant or Member of Family. — It has several times been held that one may become entitled to the remedies of a guest against an innkeeper, though he did not himself stop or receive any entertainment at the inn, if his property is taken there in charge of his servant or a member of his family, in such a way that the law will imply it, while there, to have been in his own possession.⁴

(2) Property Taken to Inn by Bailee of Owner. — If property in the possession of a third person, as bailee of the owner, is taken to an inn by such third person, the owner does not in consequence thereof occupy the relation of guest, because the law cannot imply, in such a case, that the property was in the owner's possession.⁵

(3) Inanimate Chattels Left at Inn by Owner. — It is also a well-established rule that where the owner of inanimate chattels leaves them at an inn, without receiving any personal entertainment, or allows them to remain after his entertainment has ceased, the innkeeper is merely an ordinary bailee in respect to such chattels, because he has no profit from them, and the owner does not then occupy the relation of a guest.⁶

(4) Leaving Horses at Inn. — It has been held, in both England and America, that one who leaves his horse at an inn to be cared for thereby

Owner's Servants. — Beedle v. Morris, Cro. Jac. 224, was an action against the defendant as an innkeeper for money stolen from the plaintiff's servant while lodging at the defendant's inn. It was objected that the custom of the realm was only for travelers, and that the plaintiff himself was not a traveler, but it was adjudged that he might maintain the action. See also Bennett v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273; Seymour v. Cook, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 451.

In the Case of a Corporation whose agent, while traveling on the business of the corporation, with its property in his possession, stops at an inn, the justice and propriety of the rule stated in the text are obvious, and the innkeeper cannot escape liability for the theft of such goods while so at his inn, on the ground that a corporation could not, in the nature of things, be a guest. Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417.

5. Property Taken to Inn by Bailee of Owner. — Coykendall v. Eaton, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 438, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 188. In this case the plaintiff's son, twenty-five years of age, went to the defendant's inn to attend a ball. While he was at the inn a buggy robe which he had borrowed from the plaintiff was lost. It was held that the defendant was not liable to the plaintiff as an innkeeper, but only as an ordinary bailee, because the plaintiff's son went to the inn on his own business and not as the agent or servant of the plaintiff, and no claim was made that he was a member of the plaintiff's family. Compare Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280, 20 Am. Dec. 471. In this case one Lydia Giles, who had hired a horse of the plaintiff, drove it to Boston to the house of one Abrams, where she remained as a visitor, sending the horse to the stable of the defendant, an innkeeper, to be kept during her visit. At the end of four days, when Lydia Giles sent for the horse, the harness could not be found, and was supposed to have been stolen, and it was held, on the authority of Yorke v. Grenaugh, 2 Ld. Raym. 866, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

becomes a guest, quoad the property so committed to the innkeeper's care,¹ because the innkeeper has profit from its keep.² There are, however, several dicta opposed to this rule,³ and in some recent cases the contrary has been squarely decided.⁴

c. NATURE OF ACCOMMODATIONS FURNISHED. — While those persons only can be regarded as guests who resort to an inn for the purpose of obtaining such accommodations as inns usually afford,⁵ it is not necessary that they should require all that an inn can furnish, but it is sufficient if they take lodgings only,⁶ or food without lodgings;⁷ and it has even been held that one

B. 340; Russell v. Fagan, 7 Houst. (Del.) 389; Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280, 20 Am. Dec. 471; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574.

In the case of Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280, 20 Am. Dec. 471, the traveler never went to the inn, but stopped as a visitor with a friend, and sent her horse and carriage to the inn. After four days she sent for the property, and found that a part of it had been stolen; but still the innkeeper was held liable.

The Accommodation and Convenience of Travelers seem to be an important element of the rule stated in the text. See Russell v. Fagan, 7 Houst. (Del.) 389.

In Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663, the owner of several horses placed them at an inn in the village where he resided, and they were cared for by the innkeeper for several weeks. The question arose as to whether the relation of innkeeper and guest existed, and it was argued that it did not, because the owner of the horses was not a traveler or a transient person. The court held, on the facts involved, that the relation did not exist. It would seem, therefore, that the precise point decided was that, where a person who is not a traveler or transient person, but the neighbor of an innkeeper, puts his horses at the inn to be kept, he does not thereby become a guest so as to give rise to the mutual rights and liabilities of an innkeeper in respect to the horses; though it was said by Bronson, J., delivering the opinion, that even if the owner of the horses had been a traveler, it would not make him a guest to leave his horse at the inn, if he did not stop there himself. But see Walker v. Sharpe, 31 U. C. Q. B. 340. In this case the plaintiff's horse was left at the defendant's inn, not by the plaintiff, or by his servant or any member of his family, but by one S., to whom the plaintiff had lent or hired the horse. It was strangled while so in the defendant's stable, owing, as the jury found, to negligence of the defendant's servant in tying it up in the stall, and it was held that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff as innkeeper.

doubted whether a traveler who did not go to the inn himself, but only left his horse there, which the innkeeper was not obliged to receive, thereby became a guest. In Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663, Bronson, J., expressed the same opinion, and referring to York v. Grindstone, 1 Salk. 388, 2 Ld. Raym. 866, said that as to the point for which it is usually cited as an authority, it rests on the dictum of Powell, Powys, and Gould, JJ., because that point did not actually arise; but that the decision turned on the construction of the avowry and the proper mode of pleading, and that the judges gave as the authority for their dictum the case of Robinson v. Water, Popham 127, in which the point decided was that the innkeeper had a lien on the plaintiff's horse, though the animal was brought to the inn by one who took him wrongfully.

In Lynar v. Mossop, 36 U. C. Q. B. 230, the plaintiff went from the train on which he had been traveling to the defendant's hotel, taking with him a portmanteau and other luggage. He applied to the clerk of the hotel for a room, and one was assigned to him. He said that he wanted the room only to change his dress before going to a friend. His luggage was taken to the room, and hot water was brought at his request, for the purpose of shaving. He occupied the room for about an hour and then went to the house of his friend. He left his luggage in the room, but said nothing about returning to it. It was held that he was a guest during the time that he was using the room for the purpose of dressing.

A European Hotel, which may furnish lodgings without food, has been held within the principle of the cases cited supra, this note, to be an inn. Bullock v. Adair, 63 Ill. App. 30; Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 200; Bernstein v. Sweeny, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 271.

who visits an inn merely for the purpose of obtaining liquor thereby becomes a guest.¹ Furthermore, a person is none the less a guest because he comes to the inn, not on his own business or pleasure, but in the company and at the expense of another, if he comes as a traveler or transient to receive entertainment in that character.² On the other hand, one does not become a guest by obtaining a room at an inn solely for the accomplishment of some unlawful or improper purpose,³ or in any case where he visits the house, not as a traveler or transient and with the view of receiving the usual accommodations desired by persons in that character.⁴

d. DURATION OF RELATION — (1) Commencement. — It is often important to ascertain when the relation of innkeeper and guest commences, in cases involving liability for the loss of or injury to the guest's effects. This is a question of fact, the solution of which generally depends on the facts of each case.⁵ It is obvious that when a person goes to an inn as a traveler or wayfarer, and the innkeeper receives him as such, the relation of landlord and guest attaches at once.⁶ The intention, however, to avail himself of the entertainment offered, that is, to obtain refreshments or lodging, or both, is material, and if the party should engage and pay for a room merely to secure a safe place for the deposit of his valuables, and without any intention of occupying it, he would not be a guest.⁷ Under some circumstances, too, the Massachusetts Statute. — The idea that a person who resorts to an inn for the purpose of procuring and drinking intoxicating liquors is a guest is expressly excluded by the Massachusetts statute (Pub. Stat. Mass. 1882, c. 100, § 9, cl. 2), which forbids the sale of liquor on Sunday, "except that if the licensee is also licensed as an innholder he may supply such liquor to guests who have resorted to his house for food or lodging." Conn. v. Hagan, 140 Mass. 289.

2. Going to Inn in Company and at Expense of Another. — Read v. Amidon, 41 Vt. 15, 98 Am. Dec. 560.

A Distinction is to be noted, however, between a case like the one stated in the text, and one where a person goes to an inn to visit a guest and to be there entertained by the guest. In the latter case, the visitor does not become the guest of the innkeeper. See Gastenhof v. Clair, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 265.

3. Taking Room for Unlawful or Improper Purpose. — In Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 4, 53 Am. Rep. 242, it was held that a man did not become a guest, within the legal significance of the word, where he went to a hotel near his residence and took a room for the night, merely for the purpose of having illicit intercourse with a woman whom he brought with him. The court said that the considerations of public policy on which the extraordinary liabilities of innkeepers are founded have no application to such a case, and that a guest is only one who, as a traveler or transient person, put up at an inn for a lawful purpose, to receive its customary entertainment. Compare Lucia v. Omel, 46 N. Y. App. Div. 200.

4. Person Attending Balls, Banquets, etc., at Inn Not a Guest. — Carter v. Hobbs, 12 Mich. 52, 83 Am. Dec. 762; Amey v. Winchester, 68 N. H. 447, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 20, 21; Fitch v. Casler, 17 Hun

Accommodations for Stallion and Keeper. — Mowers v. Fethers, 61 N. Y. 34, 19 Am. Rep. 244, reversing 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 112, and distinguishing Washburn v. Jones, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 193, was an action to recover the value of a stallion which was destroyed by fire while at the defendant's inn. It appeared that the plaintiffs, having appointed an itinerary for their horse for the season of 1865, one station of which was the defendant's inn, made a special agreement with the defendant, before the season commenced, by which the defendant was to give the plaintiffs the exclusive use of a designated box stall in his barn, in which to keep the horse for two days of each week, and to furnish oats for the horse and meals for the man in charge at prices less than the ordinary rates for travelers. The agreement also provided that the plaintiffs should feed, care for, and groom the horse. It was held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, because the sojourn of the man and the horse at the inn was not that of an ordinary traveler within the strict rule of common-law liability for the preservation of the property of guests.

relation may commence before the party actually reaches the inn,¹ or where he does not go in person at all.²

(2) Termination — (a) By Guest — aa. DEPARTURE FROM INN. — The guest generally comes without any bargain, remains without one, and may go when he pleases, paying only for the actual entertainment received.³ Accordingly he ceases to be a guest when he pays his bill and departs,⁴ even though he intends to return,⁵ unless by mutual understanding or agreement the relation is continued during his absence.⁶ And where he departed without removing his effects, it has been held that the relation will continue for such reasonable time as will afford him an opportunity of removing them.⁷ But as long as the guest is actually on the premises the liability of the innkeeper continues though the guest has paid his bill and is in the act of departing.⁸

Leaving the Inn Temporarily, however, as where the guest merely goes out to view the town or to witness some spectacle there, intending to return again, has been held not to terminate the relation.⁹

Leaving Baggage or Effects at Inn. — When a departing guest leaves his baggage or effects at the inn, that fact does not operate to continue the relation, but the innkeeper becomes merely an ordinary bailee of such property.¹⁰ It has been held, however, that where a departing guest leaves his luggage at the Intention Is a Question of Fact, and hence all of the authorities say that whether the relation of landlord and guest exists is always a question of fact for the jury. The evidence, however, may be of such a character in a given case as to leave no room for dispute as to the party's intention. Thus, if he engage a room at a hotel and occupy it in the usual way, there can be no question that he intended to become a guest. Bunn v. Johnson, 77 Mo. App. 596.

Want of Authority in the Porter to receive baggage, checks for baggage, or guests, at the depot, his duty being simply to advertise the hotel and suggest it to strangers, will not relieve the innkeeper from liability, where it is not shown that the traveler knew of any such limitation of authority, but simply knew such porter was in fact the porter of the hotel. inn with the innkeeper's consent, the innkeeper remains liable for it as such for a reasonable time, to be estimated according to the circumstances of the case, though he gets no additional compensation for taking care of it;¹ but this proposition has been criticised as not sound in principle, and as failing to observe the distinction between live chattels, for the keep of which the innkeeper has compensation, and inanimate things, from which he derives no profit.²

bb. ABANDONMENT OF TRANSIENT CHARACTER. — A guest at an inn may terminate the existing relation by abandoning his transient character, and this may be effected merely by forming an intention to remain indefinitely or permanently, without any present purpose of going on to any other place.³

A Special Contract with an Innkeeper, made by one who has been received as a guest, does not operate to convert the relation to that of a boarder if the party retains his character as a transient.⁴

The Presumption always is that one who comes as a guest remains in that capacity until a change of relation is shown.⁵

(b) By Innkeeper. — An innkeeper has the right to terminate the relation and require a guest to depart, if the guest conducts himself in an improper or disorderly manner,⁶ or is in default in the payment of the innkeeper's proper charges.⁷ Also, if the guest loses his status as a transient, the innkeeper may require him to leave, because innkeepers are required by law to entertain transients.⁸

c. DISTINCTION BETWEEN GUESTS AND BOARDERS — (1) Definition of Boarder. — A boarder has been defined as one who makes a special contract with another person for food, with or without lodging.⁹

(2) Permanent or Transient Character of Stay. — The essential difference between a mere boarder and a guest at an inn lies in the character in which the party comes, that is, whether he is a transient person or not; and accordingly one who stops at an inn or a hotel as a transient is a guest, with all the rights, privileges, and liabilities incident to that relation.¹⁰ On the other hand, one who seeks accommodations, with such a view to permanency as to make the place his home for the time being, is not a guest, but a boarder.¹ The length of his stay, however, is not of itself ordinarily decisive, for he will continue to be a guest as long as he remains in the transitory condition of that relation;² but still one may cease to be a guest and become a boarder, and the length of his stay is a fact which may be considered in determining this question.³

8. Guest Losing Status as Transient. — A traveler who goes to a common inn is not necessarily entitled to accommodation therein as long as he chooses to remain on payment of the inn charges and conducting himself properly, and if he forms an intention of staying in the inn and has no intention of going on to any other place, he ceases to be a traveler, and the innkeeper is entitled to terminate the relation of host and guest by reasonable notice. The question whether a traveler staying in a common inn has ceased to be a traveler is a question of fact, in determining which the length of his stay in point of time must be taken into consideration, but is not of itself conclusive. Lamond v. Richard, (1897) 1 Q. B. 541, 66 L. J. Q. B. 315, 76 L. T. N. S. 141, 45 W. R. 289, 61 J. P. 260. See also Whiting v. Mills, 7 U. C. Q. B. 450.

(3) Contract Creating Relation. — It has also been said that there is a difference between a boarder and a guest in regard to the contract by which the relation is created in the respective instances; a boarder being under an express contract at a certain rate, for a certain time,⁴ while a guest at an inn is ordinarily entertained from day to day, according to his business, on an implied contract.⁵ But this difference seems to rest more on the practice usually followed in the dealings between innkeepers and their guests; for it has frequently been held that, where a transient goes to an inn for entertainment as

Intention to Remain at Inn Indefinitely. — In Moore v. Long Beach Development Co., 87 Cal. 483, 22 Am. St. Rep. 265, the plaintiff went with his family to the defendant's hotel, with the intention of remaining there indefinitely in case his wife's health should be benefited, but with a view, if her health did not improve, to leave at any time. He had previously made an arrangement with the defendant for terms of entertainment at a great deal less than those for a transient traveler, and by the month, and during his stay at the hotel he had no other place of residence. It was held that the plaintiff and his family were boarders and not guests.

A Regular Boarder at a Hotel, by the month, at a fixed price, is in no sense a guest so as to hold the proprietors liable as innkeepers. Lawrence v. Howard, 1 Utah 142.

Presumption as to Relation. — Where a person goes to an inn, the presumption is that he goes as a guest, unless there is evidence showing that he goes as a boarder. Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198; Hall v. Pike, 100 Mass. 495.

Some Members of a Family stopping at a hotel may be boarders, while others are guests. Thus, where a man placed his wife and children at a hotel to board indefinitely, and made them occasional visits, two or three times a year, it was held that the wife and children were boarders, and that the man, when present on a visit, was a guest, and that in case of theft of their property the hotelkeeper was liable as an innkeeper only for such articles as belonged personally to the man and were brought with him on the visit during which the theft occurred. As respects jewelry and wearing apparel of the wife and children, the inn-keeper's liability was held to be governed by the status of the members of the family to whom such articles belonged. Lusk v. Belote, 22 Minn. 468.

such, he becomes a guest, with all a guest's rights and liabilities, though he makes a special contract with the innkeeper, either as to the price of the entertainment or the duration of his stay at the inn, or both.¹

Effect of Special Contract as Evidence of Relation. — Though a special contract between an innkeeper and a transient is not determinative of the question whether such transient is a boarder, it is evidence thereof to be considered with the other evidence in the case.²

IV. DUTIES, RIGHTS, AND LIABILITIES — 1. Receiving and Entertaining Guests — a. EXTENT OF DUTY. — It is a well-settled rule, which has been in force from the earliest times, that every one who keeps a common inn is under a legal obligation to afford proper entertainment to all persons offering themselves as guests, unless he has a reason, good and sufficient in law, for not doing so.³

It Is Only a Reasonable Accommodation, in respect to those things usually furnished at an inn, that the guest is entitled to demand, and therefore he has no right to select any particular apartment,⁴ and no right to any apartment except for the purpose of lodging and refreshment;⁵ nor can he require the innkeeper to furnish him with post horses, though the innkeeper is licensed to let them and has horses at liberty at the time the guest calls for them.⁶

b. GROUNDS FOR REFUSING ENTERTAINMENT. — There are several grounds on which an innkeeper may refuse to receive a proposed guest. Thus he is not bound to receive any who are not travelers or transients;⁷ or persons not Removing Guest from One Room to Another. — An innkeeper has the sole right to select the apartment for a guest, and, if he finds it expedient, to change it and assign him another. He cannot be treated as a trespasser for entering to make the change. Doyle v. Walker, 26 U. C. Q. B. 502.

7. Innkeepers Bound to Receive Only Travelers or Transients. — Rex v. Luellin, 12 Mod. 445; Reg. v. Rymer, 2 Q. B. D. 136, 13 Cox C. C. 378, 46 L. J. M. C. 108, 35 L. T. N. S. 774, 25 W. R. 415.

The statement that an innkeeper is not bound to receive any persons as guests except such as are travelers or transients, is only another way of saying that only persons of that condition may become guests, which matter has been considered in another place. See supra, this title, Who Are Guests — Who May Become a Guest.

in a fit condition to come to the inn,¹ as where they are drunk, disorderly, or otherwise obnoxious,² or are not able to pay the price of their entertainment.³ Neither is an innkeeper bound to entertain an agent of a rival inn who seeks to entice away his customers.⁴

On the Other Hand, it has been held to be no excuse for failing to provide a traveler with entertainment, that the innkeeper did not have sufficient food,⁵ or that the person seeking entertainment was traveling on Sunday,⁶ or at an hour of the night after the innkeeper's family had gone to bed,⁷ or that he was an infant,⁸ or that he refused to tell his name and abode.⁹

c. LIABILITIES FOR IMPROPER REFUSAL — (1) Action by Party Injured. — If an innkeeper improperly refuses to receive and entertain any person coming to the inn as a guest, he is liable, in consequence of such unlawful act, to an action by the injured party for damages.¹⁰

1. Persons Not in Fit Condition. — Hall v. State, 4 Harr. (Del.) 132; Russell v. Fagan, 7 Houst. (Del.) 389.

One Whose Filthy Condition Would Annoy Other Guests may properly be excluded from an inn by the proprietor. Per Parker, J., in Markham v. Brown, 8 N. H. 523, 31 Am. Dec. 209.

2. Drunk or Disorderly Persons. — Hawthorn v. Hammond, 1 C. & K. 404, 47 E. C. L. 404; Howell v. Jackson, 6 C. & P. 723, 25 E. C. L. 617; Rex v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, 32 E. C. L. 493; Hutchins v. Durham, 118 N. Car. 457; McHugh v. Schlosser, 159 Pa. St. 480, 39 Am. St. Rep. 699, 34 W. N. C. (Pa.) 33; Com. v. Mitchel, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 431, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 63, 7 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 59.

Disorderly Conduct is also mentioned as a reason for refusing to receive a guest, in Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 323.

Conduct Offensive to Other Guests. — In Reg. v. Rymer, 2 Q. B. D. 136, 13 Cox C. C. 378, 46 L. J. M. C. 103, 35 L. T. N. S. 774, 25 W. R. 415, it was held that an innkeeper had reasonable ground for refusing entertainment where the guest, who had been in the habit of coming to the inn with several large dogs which had been found an annoyance to other guests, persisted in bringing his dogs notwithstanding the objections of the innkeeper.

Illness of a Guest, in consequence of which he causes a disturbance and annoys other guests, will not justify the innkeeper in removing him, except in a manner suited to his condition. McHugh v. Schlosser, 159 Pa. St. 480, 39 Am. St. Rep. 699, 34 W. N. C. (Pa.) 33.

Where a Guest Is Taken Ill with a Contagious Disease, the proprietor, after notice, has the right to remove him, in a careful and becoming manner and at an appropriate hour, to some hospital or other place of safety, provided the life of the guest be not imperiled thereby. Levy v. Corey, (N. Y. City Ct. Tr. T.) 1 City Ct. (N. Y.) Supp. 57.

3. Persons Not Able to Pay for Entertainment. — Markham v. Brown, 8 N. H. 523, 31 Am. Dec. 209.

Means of Payment is mentioned as one of the qualifications without which the innkeeper need not receive a guest, in Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 323.

Tender of Compensation. — In Rex v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, 32 E. C. L. 493, it was held that a tender of compensation by a guest was not necessary to support an indictment for the refusal of the innkeeper to furnish entertainment.

In a later case, however, it was held that in order to recover against an innkeeper for refusal to receive a guest, the declaration must allege a tender of the amount to which the innkeeper would reasonably be entitled, unless a tender cannot be made, as where the innkeeper refuses to open his door. Fell v. Knight, 8 M. & W. 269, in which the court refuses to follow the case of Rex v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, 32 E. C. L. 493. See also 1 Hawk. P. C. 452.

4. Rival Enticing Away Customers. — Jencks v. Coleman, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 221 (dictum of Story, J.).

5. Lack of Food No Excuse for Failure to Provide Entertainment. — Atwater v. Sawyer, 76 Me. 539, 49 Am. Rep. 634. This case was decided under a statute which provides that "every innholder shall at all times be furnished with suitable provisions and lodging for strangers and travelers, * * * and he shall grant such reasonable accommodations as occasion requires to strangers, travelers, and others."

6. Guest Traveling on Sunday. — Rex v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, 32 E. C. L. 493.

Though a guest coming on Sunday may not be refused for that reason, the local excise laws may forbid the innkeeper to furnish him with intoxicating liquors. Hall v. State, 4 Harr. (Del.) 132; Com. v. Naylor, 34 Pa. St. 86.

7. Guest Coming After Innkeeper's Family Had Gone to Bed. — Rex v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, 32 E. C. L. 493.

8. Infancy Not a Ground for Refusing Entertainment. — Watson v. Cross, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 148.

9. Refusal of Proposed Guest to Tell His Name and Abode. — Rex v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, 32 E. C. L. 493.

Penalties Are Also Prescribed by Statute in some jurisdictions for the refusal of an innkeeper to receive any person as a guest on account of such person's race or color. These statutes are usually known as the Civil Rights Acts, and are designed to prevent discrimination against persons of the negro race.¹

Measure of Damages. — Since the action sounds in tort,² it is governed by the general rule applicable to that class of actions, namely, that the measure of damages is based on the theory of compensation for the wrong and injury;³ and exemplary damages may be allowed when there are aggravating circumstances.⁴

(2) Indictment. — Not only is it a civil wrong at common law for an innkeeper to refuse, without a good reason, to entertain a traveler, but it is also a public offense for which the innkeeper may be indicted and fined.⁵

(3) Compelling Performance of Duty. — It has also been said that an innkeeper may be compelled by a constable of the town to receive and entertain as his guest a person who is lawfully entitled to entertainment.⁶

2. Excluding or Ejecting Persons Not Coming as Guests. — An innkeeper, by virtue of his proprietorship, has an undoubted right to exclude or eject from his premises any and all persons whose presence may be objectionable to him. This principle is recognized by all the cases involving the liability of an innkeeper for refusing to receive a guest, or compelling a guest to leave.⁷ As to persons not coming as guests, the rule is laid down as necessary for the protection of both the proprietor and his guests, that, if a man has entered a public inn and his presence is disagreeable to the proprietor or his guests, the proprietor may request him to depart, and if he refuses, may lay hands gently on him and lead him out, or use all the force necessary to put him out, if he resists.⁸ In case any one should call to see a guest, it would seem that the innkeeper ought to communicate the fact to him and admit the visitor, if the guest should wish it; but this is probably more a matter of courtesy than of right, and the innkeeper may refuse to allow the visitor to enter, or may eject him if he has already entered.⁹ This principle, however, goes merely to the innkeeper's exclusive dominion over his own premises, and does not involve a denial of any duty on his part to admit visitors on proper occasions. On the contrary, it has been said that the innkeeper would be liable to both the Remedy Restricted to Action for Damages. — Guests at a hotel cannot maintain ejectment if evicted, but can only sue for damages if wrongfully turned out. Hutchins v. Durham, 118 N. Car. 457.

1. Statutory Penalties — Civil Rights Acts. — Fruchey v. Eagleson, 15 Ind. App. 88. See also the title CIVIL RIGHTS, vol. 6, p. 68, and the various local codes and statutes in the United States.

A Federal Statute of the same tenor was passed in 1875, but it was declared unconstitutional, as legislation not within the authority of Congress. Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3.

2. Action Sounds in Tort. — McCarthy v. Niskern, 22 Minn. 90.

3. Measure of Damages — Compensation for Injury. — In Willis v. McMahan, 89 Cal. 156, it was held that, in an action for refusal of an innkeeper to receive the plaintiff as a guest, the plaintiff may show that his purpose of stopping at the inn was to drink mineral waters to be had there, and that preventing him from using the water had an injurious effect on his health.

For a Full Discussion of the principles governing the measure of damages in actions sounding in tort, see the title DAMAGES, vol. 8, p. 640.

4. Exemplary Damages were allowed in a case where the guest had engaged and paid for a night's lodging, and the innkeeper refused to let him have it, and then turned him out of the inn with abusive and insulting language. McCarthy v. Niskern, 22 Minn. 90.

5. Innkeeper Indictable for Refusal to Entertain Guests. — Rex v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, 32 E. C. L. 493; Rex v. Luellin, 12 Mod. 445, Civil Rights Bill, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 541; *Kisten v. visitor and the guest for any injury suffered by them respectively.¹

3. Liability in Respect to Effects of Guests — a. RULE STATED. — It is the duty of an innkeeper to keep the goods of his guests safely night and day, so that no loss shall happen through his default or that of his servants, or others for whose presence in the inn the innkeeper is responsible, and if he is guilty of any breach of this duty he is liable to the party injured for the loss sustained.² This is the general rule, but there are some exceptions to it which will be considered presently.³

What Law Governs. — In an action against an innkeeper to enforce such liability, resort must be had to the law of the country where the inn is kept to determine the liability of the defendant, the legality of the plaintiff's claim, and the amount to which he is legally entitled.⁴

b. REASON OF RULE. — The rule making innkeepers liable for the loss of their guests' goods is founded on considerations of public policy for the protection of travelers against the negligence and dishonest practices of innkeepers and their servants.⁵ It had its origin at an early period when highways were infested with thieves and highwaymen, with whom the innkeepers frequently colluded, and was the only means under such conditions by which protection could be afforded to travelers who had no means of knowing the neighborhood or the character of those whom they might meet at an inn.⁶

This rule is recognized by all the cases cited in this section relating to the liability of innkeepers in respect to the effects of their guests.

Absence or Sickness of the Innkeeper is no excuse for him in case of a loss by theft, because he is bound in such cases to provide honest and faithful servants according to the confidence reposed in him by the public. Cross v. Andrews, Cro. Eliz. 622; Borradaile v. Hunter, 5 M. & G. 639, 44 E. C. L. 335; Houser v. Tully, 62 Pa. St. 96, 1 Am. Rep. 390; 2 Pars. Cont. 147.

The Criterion of Liability is the right of the innkeeper to charge the guest for his entertainment. Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32; Miller v. Peeples, 60 Miss. 819, 45 Am. Rep. 423; Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, 4 Am. Rep. 655. S.) 500, in which Brown, J., says that while the ancient rule is still enforced against the classes of persons to whom it was originally applied, the tendency of modern legislation and judicial opinion has been to limit it strictly to them.

Adoption from Roman Law. — The rule as to the liability of innkeepers for their guests' goods was adopted from the Roman law contained in the edict providing that if innkeepers and certain other classes of persons should not

c. EXCEPTIONS TO RULE—(1) Act of God or Public Enemy. — In many of the cases which discuss the liability of innkeepers for the loss of their guests' effects, losses resulting from the act of God or a public enemy are mentioned as an exception to the general rule, though there does not seem to be any case actually deciding that point. But the authorities holding that innkeepers are insurers usually declare that their liability is precisely the same as that of common carriers of goods, whose exemption from liability for losses caused by an act of God or a public enemy is established by numerous decisions.¹

(2) Operation of Vis Major. — In some jurisdictions innkeepers are not held liable for losses which result from inevitable accident or irresistible force, though the accident may not amount to what the law denominates the act of God, and the force may not be the power of a public enemy.²

(3) Negligence of Guest — (a) Statement of Rule. — It is well settled that an innkeeper is not liable for any loss which was caused by the negligence of the guest himself, and it is immaterial, so far as this principle is concerned, whether the innkeeper is regarded as an insurer or not, because, in any event, the liability is only pro defectu hospitatorum.³

(b) What Constitutes Negligence. — What constitutes negligence in any case is a question of fact, to be determined on a consideration of all the circumstances of the particular case, and an act or omission which is negligence in one case may not be so regarded in another.⁴ Thus it has been held that it is not negligence on the part of a guest to keep his money and valuables about his person, instead of depositing them with the innkeeper, in the absence of any statutory regulation or other limitation of liability;⁵ or to fail to give notice of the value of his luggage at the time of its delivery to the innkeeper's porter to be carried to the inn;⁶ or to allow several days to pass after the innkeeper received the baggage without inquiring as to its safety;⁷ or to permit the innkeeper to place in the room with him another guest, by whom a theft is committed;¹ or to deliver goods to a servant employed by the innkeeper to receive and keep the property of guests, instead of placing them in a check-room provided by the innkeeper;² or to remain out of his room all night.³ On the other hand, it has been held that it is such negligence as will defeat the remedy of the guest against the innkeeper, if he recklessly exposes money or other property of a character likely to tempt dishonest persons,⁴ or if he permits a third person to exercise acts of ownership over his baggage without informing the innkeeper that he (the guest) is the owner.⁵

Failure to Lock Door. — It is held that there is no obligation on the part of a guest to lock or fasten the door of his room, and therefore his omission to do so will not, as a matter of law, discharge the innkeeper from his liability to answer for the goods of the guest stolen from such room,⁶ unless, perhaps, the room was taken for some purpose not connected with his entertainment, as where a guest takes a separate room in which he may keep and exhibit his goods to prospective purchasers.⁷ It cannot be said, however, that the failure of a guest to lock his door is not evidence of negligence. On the contrary, such omission on his part may be considered in connection with other facts and circumstances in the case in determining whether or not he was negligent.⁸ But even in a case where the failure of a guest to lock his door would be negligence, the innkeeper may, by his own wrongful or improper conduct, preclude himself from showing it as a defense.⁹

Noncompliance with Regulations of Inn. — It is a well-established principle that innkeepers may limit their liability by making reasonable rules and regulations, and giving notice thereof to their guests.¹⁰ And this right, in some

7. Goods Stolen from Room Not Used Causa Hospitalandi. — In Burgess v. Clements, Holt N. P. 211, note, 3 E. C. L. 90, 16 Rev. Rep. 473, the plaintiff, a factor, obtained a private room at the defendant's inn, for the purpose of exhibiting his goods to customers. The defendant gave him a key to the room and told him that he might lock the door, which, however, the plaintiff neglected to do and some of the goods were stolen. It was held that the defendant was not liable, because the care of such goods could not be considered as falling within the limits of the defendant's duty as an innkeeper. See also Farnsworth v. Packwood, 1 Stark. 249, 2 E. C. L. 100.

10. Right of Innkeeper to Make Regulations. — See infra, this section, Limiting Liability.

Notice of Regulations. — In Spring v. Hager, 145 Mass. 186, 1 Am. St. Rep. 451, the plaintiff, whose goods were stolen while he was a guest at the defendant's inn, locked the door of his room on retiring at night, but did not bolt it, though there was a bolt on the door near the top. The plaintiff testified that he jurisdictions, has been expressly declared by statute.¹ But in case of a loss where the guest failed to comply with the regulations of the inn, that fact does not relieve the innkeeper, if there is no evidence that it was the cause of the loss.²

Intoxication of Guest. — It has been held that the intoxication of a guest whose goods are stolen from the inn while he is in such condition does not relieve the innkeeper from liability for the loss so sustained.³ But if the intoxication of the guest contributed to the loss, he is chargeable with negligence and the innkeeper is not liable.⁴ And in Louisiana, where a guest is considered as in part the custodian, with the innkeeper, of all property brought by him to the inn and not deposited with the innkeeper, except such articles as are necessary for his comfort, it is held that intoxication, in consequence of which he acts so carelessly that he is robbed, is contributory negligence which will relieve the innkeeper from liability.⁵

(c) Degree of Negligence. — It is not every slight negligence on the part of a guest that will be held to relieve the innkeeper of liability for the loss of the guest's goods. The rule laid down by the authorities is that the want of ordinary care on the part of the guest, that is, such care as a prudent man may reasonably be expected to exercise under like circumstances, is sufficient to defeat a recovery against the innkeeper, where it appears that the guest's negligence proximately contributed to the loss, and that the loss would not otherwise have happened.⁶ This rule is also sustained by the analogies of the law in other cases.⁷

(4) Acts of Servants or Companions of Guests. — Another exception to the rule of liability is where the loss was caused by the acts of the servants or companions of the guest.⁸

(5) Losses Resulting from Inherent Causes. — An innkeeper is not liable where the loss was due to causes inherent in the property itself; as where a horse dies of disease or in consequence of its own viciousness, or where perishable property becomes worthless in the natural order of things.⁹

d. REQUISITES OF LIABILITY — (1) Existence of Relation of Innkeeper and Guest. — The first requisite of the extraordinary liability now under consideration is that the relation of innkeeper and guest should have existed between the parties at the time the loss or injury occurred; and such liability cannot be imposed in any case where the relation never in fact existed,¹⁰ or did not know the bolt was there when he went to bed. It did not appear that there were any regulations of the inn posted in the room, or anywhere else, which in any manner brought the bolt to the notice of the plaintiff, and it was conceded that the plaintiff's attention was not called to it by the defendants or by anyone else. The court held that the plaintiff's loss was not attributable to his noncompliance with the regulations of the inn.

where it had been terminated by the departure of the guest before the loss occurred.¹ Under such circumstances the innkeeper is a gratuitous bailee, and therefore he is liable only in case loss occurs in consequence of gross negligence on his part,² unless the guest on his departure left his baggage with the innkeeper, with the consent of the latter, in which event the innkeeper still remains liable, as such, for a reasonable length of time, to be estimated according to the circumstances of the case.³ The requirement that the

As to when and how the relation is terminated see supra, this title, Who Are Guests — Duration of Relation.

"An innkeeper's liability for the baggage of his guest is not terminated the instant the guest pays his bill and leaves the hotel, but continues for such a reasonable time thereafter as may be necessary for him to secure its removal; or, if the innkeeper, in the ordinary course of his business, undertakes its removal to a railroad or to some other common carrier, until he has made performance." Maxwell v. Gerard, 84 Hun (N. Y.) 538.

Baggage Left Without Notice to Innkeeper. — In Stewart v. Heard, 70 Ga. 449, a departing guest left his valise in the office of the hotel, without calling attention to it, and the clerk, without knowing who the owner was, took it into a room where baggage was kept. It was held that the landlord was a naked depositary, and was therefore liable only for gross neglect.

Delivery of Baggage to Wrong Person. — Where baggage left by a departing guest is delivered by the innkeeper to a stranger without making inquiry as to his right to it, the innkeeper is guilty of such gross negligence as will render him liable to the owner. Wear v. Gleason, 52 Ark. 364, 20 Am. St. Rep. 186. See also George v. Depierris, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 400.

Ordinary Care in Keeping Goods of Departing Guest. — A guest, intending to be absent a few days, left his baggage without paying his bill, and it was held that whether it was to be regarded as an ordinary bailment, or as property in the defendants' hands which they had a right to detain until the lien upon it was discharged, the defendants were bound to the exercise of ordinary care and diligence. If they could not produce it when required, it was for them to show how it had been lost; and if they could not explain the manner of its loss, the presumption would be that it was lost through their negligence, unless they proved that they had exercised all the care and diligence that could be expected from them under the circumstances. Murray v. Clarke, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 102.

relation of innkeeper and guest must have existed at the time of the loss, in order to render the innkeeper subject to the extraordinary liability, does not mean that the actual owner of the property lost must have been a guest. If it is taken to the inn by the agent or servant of the owner, and such agent or servant is the guest of the innkeeper, the owner may enforce the innkeeper's liability.¹ Neither is it implied that the guest must have actually been in the inn at the time of the loss or injury. If he was a guest at the time, though temporarily absent, the innkeeper is liable.²

Keepers of Boarding Houses and Lodging Houses. — Within the principle that the extraordinary liability under discussion exists only where there is the relation of innkeeper and guest, it is maintained by the preponderance of authority that such rule of liability does not apply to the keepers of boarding houses and lodging houses.³ On the contrary, it has been held that they are under no obligation to take care of the goods of their boarders or lodgers,⁴ because, it is said, there is neither a contract to that effect, nor a bailment of the goods,⁵ though there have been some decisions and many expressions of opinion to the effect that boarding-house keepers and lodging-house keepers are required to take as much care of the goods of their boarders or lodgers as a reasonably prudent man would take of his own, and are liable for any loss thereof occurring through the negligence of themselves or their servants.⁶

But if a Boarder Deposits Goods for safekeeping with the person with whom he boards, there is a naked deposit without reward, and the liability of the boarding-house keeper is governed by the principles applicable to that species of bailment.⁷

6. Duty of Boarding-house Keepers to Care for Goods Asserted. — See the opinions of Lord Campbell, C. J., and Coleridge, J., in Dansey v. Richardson, 3 El. & Bl. 155, 77 E. C. L. 155.

This view, says the learned author of Parsons on Contracts, is "more consistent with reason, and with the authorities so far as they bear upon the question." 2 Parsons on Contracts, 153. See also Chamberlain v. Masterson, 26 Ala. 371, in which it was said that if the goods lost belong to a boarder, in order to charge the innkeeper he would be required to show that the loss was owing to the failure on his part to discharge the duties which his situation as boarding-house keeper or the special contract with the other party imposed on him; and these duties must be measured by the analogies of the law applicable to other species of bailments.

Boarding-house Keeper Held Liable for Negligence of Servants in Care of Boarder's Property. — Smith v. Read, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 33.

"It Is Probable that This Is the Limit of the Rule, viz., that boarding-house keepers are liable, as bailees for mutual benefit, for the preservation of goods brought upon the premises by boarders." Taylor v. Downey, 104 Mich. 532, 53 Am. St. Rep. 472.

(2) Custody of Innkeeper. — The second requisite of the absolute liability of an innkeeper for the effects of his guest is that the effects, at the time of the loss or injury, must have been infra hospitium, that is, in the custody of the innkeeper as such,¹ but not necessarily within the building strictly denominated the inn.² Neither is it necessary at common law that the property of the guest should be in the special keeping of the innkeeper. It is generally sufficient that it is in the inn under his implied care.³ But in some jurisdictions this principle has been altered by statutes designed to protect innkeepers against fraudulent practices.⁴

The Custody of the Innkeeper Commences as soon as the goods are brought into the inn, though there is no actual delivery of the goods, nor any notice given him concerning them;⁵ unless the guest gives directions in regard to their keep-

Liabilities of Bailees Without Reward. — See the title BAILMENTS, vol. 3, p. 745.

1. Innkeeper Liable Only for Effects Infra Hospitium. — Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32; Candy v. Spencer, 3 F. & F. 306; Piper v. Manny, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 282; Neal v. Wilcox, 4 Jones L. (49 N. Car.) 146, 67 Am. Dec. 266; Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers (C) 1.

If an Innkeeper Receive Goods as a Bailee, and not in the character of an innkeeper, as where they are deposited in his house for the purpose of being forwarded by a carrier, the extraordinary liability is not incurred. Williams v. Gesse, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 849, 32 E. C. L. 353.

Distinction Between Goods Received as Ordinary Bailee and as Innkeeper. — In Bennett v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273, the distinction is drawn between a case where goods are left with an innkeeper as an ordinary bailee, and a case where they are received by him in the character of innkeeper. The facts were as follows: The plaintiff's servant took goods of the plaintiff to market at Manchester, and, not being able to dispose of them, went to the defendant's inn and asked the defendant's wife if he could leave them there till the week following, meaning the next market day. She said she could not tell, for they were very full of parcels. The plaintiff's servant then sat down in the inn and had some liquor, putting the goods on the floor immediately behind him. When he got up, after sitting there a little while, the goods were missing. A verdict was found for the plaintiff, and on motion for a new trial, Buller, J., observed that he was of opinion that if the defendant's wife had accepted the charge of the goods upon a special request made to her, he should have considered her as a special bailee, and not answerable in this case, having been guilty of no actual negligence; but that not being the case, he considered this to be the common case of goods brought into an inn by a guest, and stolen from thence; in which case the innkeeper was liable to make good the loss.

2. Goods May Be Infra Hospitium Though Not in Inn Building Proper. — Mason v. Thompson, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280, 20 Am. Dec. 471; Piper v. Manny, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 282; Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 175, 7 Am. Dec. 448.

Baggage Delivered on Platform Provided for that Purpose. — In Maloney v. Bacon, 33 Mo. App. 501, it was held that if an innkeeper has customarily received the baggage of his guests at a platform in front of the inn, a guest's trunk delivered on such platform in the usual and customary way, as practiced between the innkeeper and baggage-transfer men, is infra hospitium, and the innkeeper becomes liable for its safety.

3. Property of Guest Need Not Be in Innkeeper's Special Keeping. — Packard v. Northcraft, 2 Met. (Ky.) 442; Burrows v. Trieber, 21 Md. 320, 83 Am. Dec. 590; Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 175, 7 Am. Dec. 448; Kopper v. Willis, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 460; Jalie v. Cardinal, 35 Wis. 118. See also the cases cited in the next preceding note but one.

Hanging Up a Coat in the Place Allotted for that purpose is placing it infra hospitium, though it is done in the absence of the landlord and his servants. Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 163.

Custody of Innkeeper's Servants. — An innkeeper is responsible for money deposited by a guest, with one acting as barkeeper, in his absence, with his implied authority. Houser v. Tully, 62 Pa. St. 92, 1 Am. Rep. 390. See also Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 4, 53 Am. Rep. 242.

It is obvious that, in the nature of things, the delivery by a guest of his effects must often be to a servant instead of the innkeeper personally, and this is generally recognized by the statutes relating to the liability of innkeepers. See the New York statute recited in the next following note.

4. Statutes Requiring Special Delivery to Innkeeper. — The New York statute provides that no hotel keeper shall be liable to any guest in any sum for the loss of any article of wearing apparel, cane, umbrella, satchel, valise, box, bags, bundles, or other chattels belonging to such guest and not within a room assigned to him, unless the same shall be specially entrusted to the care and custody of such hotel keeper or his servants. Under this statute it is held that there is a sufficient delivery to the innkeeper where a guest, in the presence of the person apparently in charge of the office, hangs his overcoat on one of the row of hooks placed in the office behind the desk and used by the guests for that purpose. Bradner v. Mollen, (County Ct.) 27 Mis. (N. Y.) 479.

5. Goods Brought to Inn Considered in Custody of Innkeeper — England. — Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32.

ing, which make it necessary for the innkeeper to put them out of the inn.¹

Goods Constructively Infra Hospitium. — The goods and effects of a guest may be infra hospitium constructively, as well as in point of fact. Thus the custody of the innkeeper may attach before such goods and effects have actually been brought to the inn;² and so, too, a place outside the inn premises may be adopted as a part thereof by the innkeeper, as where the stable or inclosure for keeping the horses or other animals of guests is not physically connected with the inn,³ or even where the property of a guest is left on the highway without his knowledge or consent.⁴

Exclusive Custody of Guest. — Applying the principle just laid down, that an innkeeper can be held liable for the loss of the goods of a guest only when the goods were actually or constructively in the custody and under the care of the innkeeper, it is uniformly held that no such liability is incurred where the guest chooses to have his goods exclusively in his own possession and under his own care.⁵ This condition exists where a commercial traveler, or a person similarly occupied, comes with goods for sale, or to be used as samples in making sales, and keeps such goods in his bedroom, or in a separate room taken by him for the purpose, in order that he may exhibit them to his

The Ancient Rule was, that so soon as the goods of the guest were brought within the precincts of the inn, infra hospitium, the responsibility of the innkeeper for their safekeeping began. Williams v. Moore, 69 Ill. App. 619.

It Is Not Necessary to Show Actual Delivery to the innkeeper. Depositing the goods in a public room set apart for such articles is a delivery to him. Rockwell v. Proctor, 29 Ga. 107.

A Parcel Placed in the Lobby or Hall of the Inn is in the custody of the innkeeper, and he is responsible for its safety. Candy v. Spencer, 3 F. & F. 306.

Baggage Sent Before Arrival of Guest. — In Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102, it was held that where baggage is delivered to the innkeeper with the intention on the part of the owner of becoming a guest and he afterwards does become a guest, the innkeeper's liability for the safekeeping of the baggage begins at the time it was received.

1. Directions of Guest as to Mode of Keeping. — Where the horse of a guest is, at his request, put to pasture by the innkeeper, it is not infra hospitium, and for this reason the innkeeper is not bound by law to answer for such horse if it be stolen out of the pasture. But it is otherwise if the horse is put to pasture without any request from the guest. Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32.

But if a horse, placed at pasture by direction of the guest, strays or is stolen in consequence of the negligence of the innkeeper, he is liable. Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers (C) 1. See also Hawley v. Smith, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 642, where sheep put to pasture by direction of the guest were injured by eating poisonous plants.

2. Delivery of Baggage Check to Hotel Porter at Railroad Station. — Sassee v. Clark, 37 Ga. 242; Dickinson v. Winchester, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 114. 50 Am. Dec. 760.

A Private Arrangement between an Innkeeper and a Carrier for the transportation of persons and baggage to the inn does not affect travelers. They have the right to assume, without any knowledge to the contrary, that such carrier is in fact authorized by the proprietor of the inn to transport safely and securely themselves and their baggage; and when loss occurs by the negligence of such carrier, the proprietor of the inn is liable. Coskery v. Nagle, 83 Ga. 696, 20 Am. St. Rep. 333.

Delivery of Baggage Check to Hotel Clerk. — Where a person, at the time of engaging accommodations at a hotel, delivers his baggage check to the clerk, who thereupon undertakes to have the baggage brought to the hotel, and it is lost by the carrier employed for that purpose, the hotel keeper is liable. Williams v. Moore, 69 Ill. App. 618.

3. Stable or Inclosure Not Physically Connected with Inn. — See Cohen v. Manuel, 91 Me. 274, where it was held that a vehicle which was placed, by the innkeeper's direction, at his stable situated some distance from the inn, was infra hospitium.

Cattle Kept Over Night. — An innholder receiving cattle to keep over night is responsible as such for the safety of the place provided for them. Hilton v. Adams, 71 Me. 19.

4. Leaving Vehicle in Street. — Jones v. Tyler, 1 Ad. & El. 522, 28 E. C. L. 138, 3 N. & M. 576, 3 L. J. K. B. 166. To the same effect are Albin v. Presby, 8 N. H. 408, 29 Am. Dec. 679; Piper v. Manny, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 282; Clute v. Wiggins, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 175, 7 Am. Dec. 448.

Putting Horse at Pasture. — In Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32, it was said that if an innkeeper, at his own instance and without any request of his guest, put the guest's horse at pasture, whence it was stolen, the innkeeper would be liable therefor.

5. Goods in Exclusive Custody of Guests. — Richmond v. Smith, 8 B. & C. 9, 15 E. C. L. 144; Packard v. Northcraft, 2 Met. (Ky.) 442; Weisenger v. Taylor, 1 Bush (Ky.) 276, 89 Am. Dec. 626; Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush (Ky.) 43, 96 Am. Dec. 327; Fuller v. Coats, 18 Ohio St. 343.

customers,¹ though the innkeeper is not thereby relieved of all responsibility.² But a guest, by retaining the custody of his personal effects, such as his trunk and its contents, and those things which travelers usually carry about their persons, does not assume the exclusive care thereof, so as to relieve the innkeeper of his common-law liability.³

(3) Default of Innkeeper. — The extraordinary liability of an innkeeper for the loss of his guests' effects exists only where he is legally in default. Many and weighty authorities hold that he is in default, within the meaning of this principle, in any case of loss or injury from whatever cause, unless it happened by the act of God or a public enemy, or resulted from the negligence of the guest himself. Other authorities are to the effect that the word "default," in this connection, means "negligent" in the ordinary sense of the word, and that, while an innkeeper is prima facie liable for any loss, he may excuse himself by proving that the cause was vis major; and some go even to the length of permitting him to show that the loss was not due to any negligence on his part.⁴

c. NATURE AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY — (1) Rule of Liability as Insurer. — The rule that has generally been laid down is that an innkeeper is absolutely liable for any loss of, or injury to, the goods of his guest, not arising from the act of God or a public enemy or the negligence of the guest himself; in other words, that an innkeeper is an insurer of the goods of his guest.⁵

1. Exhibiting Goods for Sale. — Burgess v. Clements, 4 M. & S. 306; Farnworth v. Packwood, 1 Stark. 249, 2 E. C. L. 100, Holt N. P. 209, 3 E. C. L. 89; Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, affirming 16 Fed. Rep. 71; Myers v. Cottrill, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 465.

In Missouri the liability of an innkeeper for goods exhibited as samples or for sale by a commercial traveler is governed by a statute which allows the traveler to give the innkeeper written notice that he has such merchandise in his possession in the hotel, leaving the innkeeper, on such notice, to elect whether he will permit the traveler to remain in the hotel with such merchandise for sale or sample. Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383.

2. If an Innkeeper Knows that His Guest Has Valuable Goods which he is exhibiting in his room, the innkeeper must use reasonable diligence to protect them. Myers v. Cottrill, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 465. And if, in consequence of his neglect to exercise such reasonable care, the goods are injured, he is liable. Scheffer v. Corson, 5 S. Dak. 233.

goods of his guest is "precisely analogous to that of a carrier"). But see Dawson v. Chamney, 5 Q. B. 164, 48 E. C. L. 164, Dav. & M. 348, 7 Jur. 1037, 13 L. J. Q. Loss by External Causes. — The logical consequence of the rule holding innkeepers absolutely liable as insurers is that no distinction is to be made between losses happening from internal causes, such as thefts by other guests or by servants, and those which result from external causes, such as burglary and robbery,¹ or accidental fire.²

(2) Rule of Prima Facie Liability. — The rule of liability adopted in some of the United States, and by recent decisions in England also, is that an innkeeper is prima facie liable for the loss of goods in his charge, but may discharge himself by showing that it happened by irresistible force, though not the act of God or a public enemy, or by inevitable accident, or otherwise without fault or negligence on his part.³

Losses by Act of God. — As to what occurrences are considered the acts of God, and for a full explanation of the meaning of the phrase, see the title ACT OF GOD, vol. I, p. 584.

The Words "Irresistible Superhuman Cause," used in the California statute, are equivalent in meaning to the phrase "act of God," and refer to those natural causes the effect of which cannot be prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care, and the use of those appliances which the situation of the party renders it reasonable that he should employ. Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198.

Theft, etc., by Persons at Inn. — The rule stated in the text applies with special force in cases of thefts, etc., committed by other guests not introduced by the owner of the property stolen, or by servants of the innkeeper, because an innkeeper insures against the acts of all persons whom he admits to the inn. Weisenger v. Taylor, 1 Bush (Ky.) 276, 89 Am. Dec. 626; Woodward v. Birch, 4 Bush (Ky.) 514. See also the cases cited supra, this note. And in such cases it is admitted even in those jurisdictions where the doctrine of absolute liability is not recognized. Cutler v. Bonney, 30 Mich. 250, 18 Am. Rep. 127.

The Georgia Statute declares that an innkeeper is a depository for hire, but that from the peculiar nature of his business his liability is governed by more stringent rules than is that of other depositories for hire; that he is bound to use extraordinary diligence in preserving the property of his guests, and that in case of loss there is a presumption of want of proper diligence on his part. Murchison v. Sergeant, 69 Ga. 206, 47 Am. Rep. 754; Adams v. Clem, 41 Ga. 67, 5 Am. Rep. 524.

1. Innkeeper Held Liable for Losses by Burglary or Robbery. — Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 230, 52 Am. Dec. 303; 1 Chitty Pl. 430, note 22.

Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, says, at one place, that innkeepers are held responsible to as strict and severe an extent as common carriers, while in another place he limits their responsibility to losses occasioned otherwise than by inevitable casualty, but by superior force, as robbery. 2 Kent Com. 591, 593.

In Jurisdictions Where Innkeepers Are Not Held as Insurers they are not liable for losses by burglary or robbery. See infra, this division of this section, Rule of Prima Facie Liability.

2. Innkeeper Held Liable for Losses by Accidental Fire. — Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 253, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198; Magee v. Pacific Imp. Co., 98 Cal. 678, 35 Am. St. Rep. 199; Hulett v. Swift, 33 N. Y. 571, 88 Am. Dec. 405, affirming 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 230.

Accidental Fire Not Act of God. — In Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 262, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198, it was held that a loss arising from an accidental fire was not caused by the act of God, unless the fire was started by lightning or some superhuman agency.

Rule Changed by Statute in New York. — In New York a statute was passed after the decision in Hulett v. Swift, 33 N. Y. 571, 88 Am. Dec. 405, cited supra, this note, by which innkeepers were expressly exempted from liability for losses caused by accidental fires. Faucett v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 377.

The Rule as to Accidental Fires Is Different, in jurisdictions where innkeepers are not held liable as insurers, from that laid down by the foregoing cases. See infra, this division of this section, Rule of Prima Facie Liability.

3. Rule of Prima Facie Liability — England. — Dawson v. Chamney, 5 Q. B. 164, 48 E. C. L. 164, Dav. & M. 348, 7 Jur. 1037, 13 L. J. Q. B. 33. The force of this case, as supporting the proposition that an innkeeper is not liable as an insurer for the loss of his guest's goods, is questioned by Sir F. Pollock in Morgan v. Ravey, 6 H. & N. 265, 30 L. J. Exch. 131, 3 L. T. N. S. 784, 9 W. R. 376. He calls attention to the fact that, according to the report of the Dawson case, in 7 Jur. 1037, "there was no evidence of the manner in which the horse received the injury for which the action was brought;" and "this," he says, "may be the explanation of that case, for though damage happening to the horse from what occurred in the stable might be evidence of defectus or neglect, still, if it was not shown how the damage arose, it was not even shown that it arose from what occurred in the stable. This would reconcile that case to the general current of authorities." In a note, however, to Morgan v. Ravey, 6 H. & N. 265, it is said that the report of Dawson v. Cholmeley, in 7 Jur. 1037, is evidently incorrect because the judgment which was written recites that the injury was caused by the kick of another horse. For Eng-

(3) Conflict of Rules Considered. — It has been observed as somewhat singular that on a practical question which must be as old as the rudiments of the law, there should be found at the present day such diversity of opinion and decision as obtains in regard to the question under consideration.¹ But it is even more singular that the same early case should be cited as authority for both of the conflicting rules.² The cases, however, are in irreconcilable lish cases supporting the opposite view, see supra, this section, Rule of Liability as Insurer.

The rule of liability laid down in South Carolina is that innkeepers are liable for all losses which might have been prevented by ordinary care. Newson v. Axon, 1 McCord L. (S. Car.) 509, 10 Am. Dec. 685.

The rule laid down in Texas is that an innkeeper is liable for any loss of property committed to his keeping which any care, vigilance, or diligence on his part could have prevented. Howth v. Franklin, 20 Tex. 798, 73 Am. Dec. 218.

Innkeepers Held Not Liable for Losses by Robbery. — Kisten v. Hildetrand, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 74, 48 Am. Dec. 416.

But in Case of Burglary he may be liable. Under the prima facie rule of liability nothing excuses but acts of God, of public enemies, of an armed mob, or forcible robbery. Gast v. Gooding, 7 West. L. J. 234, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 315. Compare McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574, in which it was said that, though an innkeeper may, under peculiar circumstances, be excused for the loss of the goods of his guest, when stolen "by a burglarious entry from without," yet this can be only by proof of some of the circumstances ordinarily attending the breaking of a house securely fastened, and by showing that it was without any fault or negligence on his part.

Accidental Fires, not caused by the innkeeper's fault, are within the rule stated in the text. Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush (Ky.) 41, 96 Am. Dec. 327; Merritt v. Claghorn, 23 Vt. 177.

Statutory Provisions as to Accidental Fires. — In some jurisdictions it is expressly provided by statute that an innkeeper shall not be liable for the loss of any baggage or other property of a guest caused by fire not intentionally produced by the innkeeper or his servants. Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, (reciting the statute of Missouri); Faucett v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 377; Burnham v. Young, 72 Me. 273.

1. Conflict of Rules Considered. — Sibley v. Aldrich, 33 N. H. 553, 66 Am. Dec. 745.

2. Common Authority for Conflicting Rules. — The leading case on the subject is Calve's Case, 8 Coke 32, in which the word defectus contained in the ancient writ against innkeepers, is rendered "default" by Lord Coke. One line of decisions construes this to mean, not negligence in the ordinary sense, but neglect of the duty which the law imposes on innkeepers to keep safely the goods committed to their care, and that there is a "default" in respect to this duty, if the goods are lost or damaged in any way, regardless of the question of want of actual care on the part of the innkeeper, unless the loss or damage was caused by the act of God or a public enemy, or by the fault of the guest himself. This is the position taken in Sibley v. Aldrich, 33 N. H. 553, 66 Am. Dec. 745. So, too, in Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221, 52 Am. Dec. 303, the court say: "It strikes us forcibly that the uncertainty and confusion which have been thrown over this branch of the law have arisen from confounding the word defectus in the writ, and the word 'default' used by Lord Coke as its translation, with the term 'negligence,' an error into which Judge Story himself seems to have fallen. (Story on Bailments, § 470.) The question of negligence does not, according to the language of the writ in the Register Brevium or the Commentary of Coke, constitute a subject for discussion in ascertaining the responsibility of innkeepers, any more than it does in ascertaining that of common carriers. The law requires of the former to keep the goods safely, as it does of the latter to carry them safely, and in case either fails, from any cause, to comply with this legal obligation, the law pronounces him in default, unless the loss be occasioned through the fault of the owner of the goods, or by the act of God, or by the public enemies. It seems, therefore, that the dictum of Mr. Justice Bayley in Richmond v. Smith, 8 B. & C. 9, 15 E. C. L. 144, is a concise and accurate summary of the doctrine of Calve's Case. 'It appears to me,' he says, 'that the innkeeper's liability very closely resembles that of a carrier. He is prima facie liable for any loss not occasioned by the act of God or the king's enemies; although he may be exonerated where the guest chooses to have his goods under his own care.' And although that dictum has been overturned in England by the subsequent decision in Dawson v. Chamney, 5 Q. B. 164, 48 E. C. L. 163, we think the dictum right, and the decision wrong." See also the cases cited conflict,¹ though in some of the decisions which lay down the rule that the liability is not absolute, but only prima facie, attention is called to the fact that the cases supporting the doctrine of absolute liability relate, with but few exceptions, either to unexplained thefts or losses, or else do not properly involve the question as to the extent of the liability.²

f. TO WHAT PROPERTY LIABILITY ATTACHES. — The general rule is that an innkeeper is liable for all the movable goods, chattels, and moneys of his guests placed within the inn; and his responsibility is not necessarily limited to such baggage as is carried for convenience of travel. This rule was laid down by an early case, and has since been acquiesced in by an almost unbroken line of decisions, English and American.³ But, notwithstanding Text Writers Criticised.—In Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221, 52 Am. Dec. 303, the court, after reciting the rule laid down by Chancellor Kent, Mr. Justice Story, and Sir William Jones, respectively, says that while Judge Story leaves the point under consideration at loose ends, the other two distinguished commentators are still more uncertain, as neither apparently agrees with himself, and that it is difficult to determine to which side of the question they intend to adhere.

Opposed to This View is Dawson v. Chamney, Dav. & M. 343, 5 Q. B. 164, 48 E. C. L. 164, 7 Jur. 1037, 13 L. J. Q. B. 33, in which Lord Denman, citing Story Bailm., construes the word defectus as used in Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32, to mean negligence in the ordinary sense. The Leading Case on the subject is Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32, decided in 1584, in which it was said: "If one brings a bag or chest, etc., of evidences into the inn, or obligations, deeds, or other specialties, and by default of the innkeeper they are taken away, the innkeeper shall answer for them, and the writ shall be bona et catalla generally, and the declaration shall be special. These words, bona et catalla, restrain the latter words to extend only to movables. And these words aforesaid, absque subtractione seu amissione, extend to all movable goods."

"It may be considered as the fair result of all the cases, that this liability covers all the personal property of every kind, infra hospitium, which the traveler or guest finds it convenient to carry about him, including money, jewelry, or other valuables devoted to use or ornament." Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 591.

Horses of Guests Within the Rule.—Dickerson v. Rogers, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 179, 40 Am. Dec. 642.

Merchandise Carried by Guest Held Within the Rule.—Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32; Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102. See, however, the cases cited in the text following note.

In Missouri an innkeeper is not liable for the loss of any merchandise for sale or sample belonging to a guest, unless the guest shall have given written notice of having such merchandise for sale or sample in his possession after entering the inn, nor shall the innkeeper be compelled to receive such guest with merchandise for sale or sample. Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, affirming 16 Fed. Rep. 71.

A Peddler's Stock of Goods is within the rule of liability. Cohen v. Manuel, 91 Me. 274; Rubenstein v. Cruikshanks, 54 Mich. 199, 52 Am. Rep. 806.

Merchandise Exhibited for Sale by a guest, either in his bedroom or in a separate room taken for the purpose, is not within the general rule stated in the text, but this is because the guest retains exclusive possession of the goods, and not because of their character. See supra, this section, Requisites of Liability—Custody of Innkeeper.

Money.—There is no distinction between money and goods of a guest in regard to the innkeeper's liability. Kent v. Shuckard, 2 B. & Ad. 803, 22 E. C. L. 186, 1 L. J. K. B. 1; Woodward v. Birch, 4 Bush (Ky.) 511; Epps v. Hinds, 27 Miss. 657, 61 Am. Dec. 528; Kellogg v. Sweeney, 46 N. Y. 291, 7 Am. Rep. 333, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 397; Quinton v. Courtney, 1 Hayw. (2 N. Car.) 40.

the uniformity of the cases on the subject, it has been directly held, in at least one of the United States, and intimated in others, that the liability of an innkeeper, in the respect under consideration, extends only to the baggage of his guests, and that the term "baggage" includes only articles for the personal convenience and use of the traveler.¹ These cases, however, entirely disregard the long-established doctrine stated above, and rest solely on the authority of cases relating to the extent of a carrier's liability in respect to the baggage of passengers.² In some jurisdictions the property to which the

The responsibility of an innkeeper in respect to the money of his guest is not limited to such an amount as is necessary for the guest's traveling expenses. Armistead v. Wilde, 17 Q. B. 261, 79 E. C. L. 261, 15 Jur. 1010, 20 L. J. Q. B. 524; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417; Smith v. Wilson, 36 Minn. 334, 1 Am. St. Rep. 669; Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, 4 Am. Rep. 655.

In Louisiana the innkeeper's responsibility depends on the circumstances of each particular case; and, when money is stolen from a traveler, should be restricted to the sum which, from the circumstances of the journey, it may be presumed, formed part of his effects, but which care should be taken not to rate too low. Simon v. Miller, 7 La. Ann. 360.

Estoppel to Object to Character and Quantity of Property. — In Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657, it was held that where an innkeeper gave notice to his guests to deposit their money and valuables, without any limit specified, for safekeeping, and that he would not otherwise be responsible therefor, and accordingly a guest deposited a large amount of money and gold-dust, which was received without objection by the innkeeper and put by him in the usual place of deposit for such things, he could not afterwards, when the property had been stolen, object as to the kind or amount thereof for the purpose of defeating or reducing a recovery for its value. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657.

1. Decisions Holding Innkeeper Liable Only for Baggage. — Pettigrew v. Barnum, 11 Md. 434, 69 Am. Dec. 212. See also Giles v. Fountleroy, 13 Md. 126; Maltby v. Chapman, 25 Md. 310; Treiber v. Burrows, 27 Md. 130. In Sasseen v. Clark, 37 Ga. 242, this question was mooted but was not decided; the court saying (p. 249) that "there seems to be a disposition to limit the liability of an innkeeper as such for such of the goods of his guests only as is usually denominated baggage, that is, to such articles of necessity or personal convenience as are usually carried by passengers for their personal use." This limitation, the court said further, "probably originated from the somewhat analogous case of common carriers, where there is a liability as common carriers for baggage without other compensation than the fare for passengers." See also Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush (Ky.) 43, 96 Am. Dec. 327, in which it was said that prima facie the law would not impose upon the landlord responsibility for silverware, bedclothing, books, etc.

In Treiber v. Burrows, 27 Md. 130, it was held that money in the trunk of a guest at an inn may constitute part of the baggage for which the innkeeper is responsible, but that it is such an amount only as may be convenient to meet personal traveling expenses; and to arrive at this, the condition of the guest, his mode of life, habits, tastes, and the character of his journey, must be taken into account.

2. Rule in Maryland Not Supported by Authority. — The Court of Appeals of Maryland, in reaching the decision in Pettigrew v. Barnum, 11 Md. 434, 69 Am. Dec. 212, did not refer to any of the cases in which the liability of innkeepers had been adjudicated, but cited, in support of its conclusions, the following authorities: Dibble v. Brown, 12 Ga. 224, 56 Am. Dec. 460; Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 586, 41 Am. Dec. 767; Orange County Bank v. Brown, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 85, 24 Am. Dec. 129; Pardee v. Drew, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 459; Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts (Pa.) 335; Johnson v. Stone, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 419; Story Bailm., § 499. None of these authorities involve any question in regard to innkeepers, but they all relate to the liability of carriers for the baggage of passengers, with one exception, Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts (Pa.) 336, which was the case of a warehouseman.

Treiber v. Burrows, 27 Md. 130, refers to this doctrine as a departure from the established rule.

Moreover, the doctrine laid down in Pettigrew v. Barnum, 11 Md. 434, 69 Am. Dec. 212, seems to be at variance with the rule impliedly recognized by the Maryland statute. This statute, enacted soon after the litigation in the case just cited began, provides that any innkeeper in a city or town of more than five hundred inhabitants, who shall provide an iron safe or other secure depository for keeping the money, jewelry, and plate belonging to his guests, and who shall take charge for safekeeping of such money, etc., shall be liable for the full value of the same if lost or stolen while thus in his charge; and that if he shall post notices reciting the purport of the statute and requesting guests to deposit their money, etc., with him or his agent, then he shall not be responsible for loss by robbery or otherwise. Pub. Gen. Law Md. 1860, art. 70, §§ 5, 6; Pub. Gen. Law Md. 1888, art. 71, §§ 5, 6.

What Constitutes Baggage. — In Pettigrew v. Barnum, 11 Md. 434, 69 Am. Dec. 212, the question what constitutes the baggage of a traveler was considered, and it was said that this depends so much upon circumstances, such as the traveler's position, habits, tastes of living, and mode of traveling, that it is easier to say in a given instance whether an article is embraced than to lay down a general rule that will apply to all cases; and it was held that the term did not embrace merchandise or other valuables not designed for use or personal convenience on the journey, such as silver knives, forks, spoons, etc.

Property of Third Persons. — Actual ownership on the part of a guest, of property brought by him to the inn and lost while infra hospitium, is not essential. If the goods lost were in the possession of the guest as the agent or servant of the actual owner, then the owner may maintain an action therefor against the innkeeper; and if the guest had a qualified property in the goods as bailee, etc., the right of action is in him.²

g. LIMITING LIABILITY — (1) By Contract. — Both the authorities and the analogies of the law in other cases support the view that an innkeeper may, either expressly or impliedly, contract with his guests for a limited liability in regard to the guest's effects; and, on principle, no good reason can be perceived why this should not be so. The transaction concerns the parties only; it involves simply rights of property, and the public can have no interest in requiring the responsibility of insurance to accompany the accommodation of the guests, in the face of an agreement for its relinquishment. By such an agreement the innkeeper becomes, with reference to the particular transaction, an ordinary bailee.³

Notice to a Guest, given by an innkeeper, to the effect that he will be liable for the guest's effects only to a certain extent, or on certain conditions, is sufficient,⁴ but an innkeeper cannot limit his liability, in the absence of statutory authority, by a general notice.⁵

1. Statutory Provisions. — The Louisiana Code makes innkeepers liable for the loss of a traveler's baggage, and such sum as is necessary for his expenses according to his condition in life and the journey undertaken; but not for other kinds of property, unless the guest deposits it with the innkeeper, or gives notice that he has it in his possession. Profiel v. Hall, 14 La. Ann. 530; Pope v. Hall, 14 La. Ann. 324. But see Woodworth v. Morse, 18 La. Ann. 156.

The statutes of Massachusetts exempt innholders from liability for the loss of goods which are not personal baggage and effects, unless such goods shall be delivered by the traveler to the innholder for safekeeping. Becker v. Haynes, 29 Fed. Rep. 441.

Compare the statutes in other jurisdictions.

2. Property of Third Persons in Possession of Guests. — Towson v. Havre-de-Grace Bank, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 47, 14 Am. Dec. 254; Quinton v. Courtney, 1 Hayw. (2 N. Car.) 40; Jordan v. Boone, 5 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 528. See also supra, this title, Who Are Guests — What Constitutes the Relation — Necessity of Personal Presence.

3. Right to Limit Liability Recognized by Authorities. — Sanders v. Spencer, 3 Dyer 2666; Richmond v. Smith, 8 B. & C. 9, 15 E. C. L. 144, in which Alexander, C. B., said that an innkeeper could not get rid of his common-law liability, unless by giving an express notice; Van Wyck v. Howard, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 147; Fuller v. Coats, 18 Ohio St. 343; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574.

In 2 Kent Com. 594, it is said that "an innkeeper, like a common carrier, * * * can only limit his liability by express agreement or notice." See also Schouler Bailm., § 309; Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657.

Custom and Usage. — In Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417, an innkeeper, who was sued for money abstracted from a guest's trunk at the inn, attempted to show a general and uniform custom of the local hotels and their guests to deposit the money of guests in safes kept for that purpose, but the court held that such evidence was not admissible because it was not shown that the custom, if any, was general and uniform, thus impliedly recognizing the principle that the matter might be regulated by custom.

An Analogy in support of the proposition stated in the text is found in the case of common carriers. For reasons of public policy it is held that they are liable as insurers of the goods committed to their charge for transportation, but it is well settled that they have the right to limit their liability. See the title CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 5, p. 288.

4. Limitation of Liability by Notice to Guest. — Richmond v. Smith, 8 B. & C. 9, 15 E. C. L. 144; Van Wyck v. Howard, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 147; 2 Kent Com. 594.

Where a guest is notified that he must deposit his baggage in a particular place for safekeeping, and he neglects to do so, the innkeeper is not responsible in case of loss. Wilson v. Halpin, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 496, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 124.

In Mateer v. Brown, 1 Cal. 221, 52 Am. Dec. 303, the question whether an innkeeper can limit his responsibility by notice was referred to but not decided.

Terms of Notice. — Unless the innkeeper has given his guest notice that he will not be responsible, if goods be left in the public room, his liability still continues, even though he may have said to his guest that he had better take them to his room. Packard v. Northcraft, 2 Met. (Kv.) 442.

5. General Notice Not Sufficient. — Stanton v. Leland, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 88.

Notice Must Be Brought Home to the Guest, and the mere fact that a notice limiting the innkeeper's liability, unless certain requirements should be observed, was posted on the door of the guest's room, is not sufficient to raise a

(2) By Statute — (a) In General. — Statutes have been enacted both in England and in the United States modifying the rigorous rule of the common law in respect to the liability of innkeepers, by permitting them to provide a place of safe deposit, and to require guests to place there money and other articles of a nature calculated to tempt dishonest persons, and easy to remove without detection. These statutes more nearly adapt the state of the law to modern conditions by giving innkeepers the right to make their liability as insurers conditional on actual custody in certain cases.¹

(b) Mode of Effecting Limitation. — In some jurisdictions the statutes limit the liability of innkeepers by declaring that they shall not be liable for losses sustained by their guests, unless the guests deliver or offer to deliver their goods to them for safe custody, thus creating an absolute limitation of liability without requiring any act to be done by the innkeepers.² But it is usually pro-presumption that he had knowledge thereof. Bodwell v. Bragg, 20 Iowa 232.

Notice Posted in Room. — In Huntly v. Bedford Hotel Co., 56 J. P. 53, it was held that a notice in a guest's room that "articles of value, if not kept under lock, shall be deposited with the manager, who will give a responsible receipt for the same," did not constitute a special bargain with the guest that the innkeeper would be responsible if such articles were kept under lock.

Notice Printed on Hotel Register. — The signing of a register under a printed heading containing an agreement that the innkeeper shall not be responsible for the loss of valuables unless deposited in the safe, is not the contract of the guest in the absence of any proof that it was seen or assented to by him. Bernstein v. Sweeny, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 271.

The Georgia Statute provides that an innkeeper cannot limit his liability by public notice, but that he may adopt reasonable regulations for his own protection, and that the publication of such to his guests binds them to comply therewith. Code Ga. 1895, § 2938.

1. The English Statute enacted in 1863 provides that no innkeeper shall be liable for any loss of or injury to property, other than live animals, brought to his inn, to a greater amount than thirty pounds, except (1) where such property shall have been stolen, lost, or injured through the wilful act, default, or neglect of such innkeeper or any servant in his employ, and (2) where such property shall have been deposited expressly for safe custody with such innkeeper; provided always that in the case of such deposit it shall be lawful for such innkeeper, if he thinks fit, to require as a condition of his liability that the property shall be deposited in a box or other receptacle fastened and sealed by the person depositing it. The statute further provides that the innkeeper shall exhibit a copy thereof in a conspicuous part of the hall or entrance to his inn. Stat. 26 & 27 Vict., c. 41; Spice v. Bacon, 2 Ex. D. 463, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 36 L. T. N. S. 896, 25 W. R. 840.

The Word "Wilful" in section 1 of this statute applies only to the following word "act," and not to the succeeding words "default or neglect." Squire v. Wheeler, 16 L. T. N. S. 93.

The notice required by the statute, in order to be effectual, must state correctly the provisions of the act, and the omission of any material portion thereof will render a notice ineffectual to protect the innkeeper. Thus, where the copy of the statute exhibited by the innkeeper, in reciting the first exception, referred to property stolen, lost, or injured through "the wilful default or neglect" of the innkeeper, instead of "the wilful act, default, or neglect," it was held that the omission was material and rendered the notice insufficient. Spice v. Bacon, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 2 Ex. D. 463, 36 L. T. N. S. 896, 25 W. R. 840.

Statutes in United States. — See 1 Stim. Am. Stat. Law, § 4392. See also the various local codes and statutes in the United States.

In Bowell v. De Wald, 2 Ind. App. 303, 50 Am. St. Rep. 240, it was held that in Indiana there is no statute regulating the liability of innkeepers for loss of personal property sustained by their guests, and their liability is therefore governed by the common law.

2. Limitation Effectuated by Terms of Statute. — The Maine statute (Laws 1874, c. 174, § 1; Rev. Stat. Me. 1883, tit. 2, c. 27, § 7) declares that innholders are not liable for losses sustained by their guests, except for wearing apparel or articles worn or carried upon the person to a reasonable amount, personal baggage, and money necessary for traveling expenses and personal use, unless upon delivery, or offer of delivery, by such guests of their money, jewelry, or other property, to the innholder, his agent or servants, for safe custody. Noble v. Milliken, 74 Me. 225, 43 Am. Rep. 581.

The Massachusetts statute is to the same effect. Becker v. Haynes, 29 Fed. Rep. 441.

The self-executing terms of the statutes are sometimes restricted in respect to the character of the property. Thus the Missouri statute provides that an innkeeper shall not be liable "for the loss of any merchandise for sale or sample belonging to a guest, unless the guest shall have given written notice of having such merchandise for sale or sample in his possession after entering the inn, nor shall the innkeeper be compelled to receive such guest with merchandise for sale or sample." Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, affirming 16 Fed. Rep. 71. Compare the statutes in other jurisdictions.

What Constitutes Delivery to Innkeeper. — There is a delivery of goods to the innkeeper for safe custody where the guest, arriving at the inn with a cart containing his goods, is directed by the innkeeper to take the cart to a stable at some distance from the inn, but owned by the innkeeper and used by him in connection with it, and the guest does take his cart there and deliver it to the innkeeper's hostler. Cohen v. Manuel, 91 Me. 274.

vided that, in order to effect a limitation of liability, the innkeeper shall provide a secure place of deposit for valuables, and post notices to the guests to leave their effects with him for safe keeping.¹ These statutes, being in derogation of the common law, are strictly construed,² and a literal compliance therewith is generally held necessary to effect the limitation.³

(c) Extent of Limitation — aa. IN GENERAL. — An innkeeper by complying with the statute on the subject does not relieve himself from all liability for the safety of the goods of his guests, if they fail to place them in his actual custody. He still remains liable for any loss caused by the act or default of himself or his servants, but his liability is no longer that of an absolute insurer; and proof of the mere fact of the loss no longer raises a presumption against him. In order to charge the innkeeper under these circumstances the guest must establish the default.⁴ The innkeeper, however, cannot claim that the degree of his responsibility is thus reduced, if the loss would have happened whether the valuables of the guest had been deposited with him or not.⁵

Noncompliance with such statutes does not relieve an innkeeper for losses caused by the acts or defaults of himself or his servants. Becker v. Haynes, 29 Fed. Rep. 441.

1. Mode of Effecting Limitation — Posting Notices. — See the various codes and statutes relating to the subject.

Notice on Hotel Register Held Not Sufficient. — Under a statute requiring the "posting," it was held not sufficient that there was on the register, on which a guest wrote his name, a notice that "all moneys, jewels, coats, valises, and other valuables must be left at the office, and checks received for them, otherwise the proprietor will not be responsible for any loss." Murchison v. Sergeant, 69 Ga. 206, 47 Am. Rep. 754. See also Olson v. Crossman, 31 Minn. 222.

2. Statutes Strictly Construed. — Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587; Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728.

3. Literal Compliance with Statute Required. — Myers v. Cottrill, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 465; Chamberlain v. West, 37 Minn. 54.

Actual Notice to a guest, that a safe has been provided for keeping the effects of guests and that the innkeeper will not be responsible for their loss unless deposited therein, is equivalent to the statutory notice by posting. Purvis v. Coleman, 21 N. Y. 111, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 321; Classen v. Leopold, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 705; Shultz v. Wall, 134 Pa. St. 262, 19 Am. St. Rep. 686, 26 W. N. C. (Pa.) 51. But see Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587, in which it was suggested that actual notice probably would not be sufficient to relieve the innkeeper from liability, if he failed to post the notice as required by law.

Posting Copies of Statute — Verbal Errors. — A mere verbal error in a copy of the statute, exhibited as required by its terms for the purpose of limiting the innkeeper's liability, will not vitiate the notice so as to make it ineffectual, if the provisions of the act are correctly stated; but the omission of a material portion of the statute will render the notice ineffectual to protect the innkeeper. Spice v. Bacon, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 2 Ex. D. 463, 36 L. T. N. S. 896, 25 W. R. 840.

Where the statute requires notices to be posted on the doors of the inn, such notices must be posted on the doors of all rooms occupied by guests, and a guest is not affected with the notice unless it was posted on the door of his room. Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587.

A Notice Printed in Small Type, instead of large type as required by the Missouri statute, is not sufficient to relieve the innkeeper of liability. Porter v. Gilkey, 57 Mo. 235.

Printing a Copy of the Statute on the Hotel Register is not sufficient, where it is provided that a copy shall be posted in each sleeping room. Batterson v. Vogel, 8 Mo. App. 24.

Deposit Expressly for Safe Custody. — By the terms of the English statute, a guest who deposits an article with an innkeeper cannot, in the absence of default or neglect, hold the innkeeper responsible to a greater amount than thirty pounds for its loss, unless, when making the deposit, he informs the innkeeper, in a reasonable and intelligible manner, that the deposit is for the safe custody of the article. O'Connor v. Grand International Hotel Co., (1898) 2 Ir. R. 92.

4. Under the English Statutes of 26 & 27 Vict., c. 47, the absolute liability of the innkeeper is limited to the sum of thirty pounds where he has complied with the statute, and the guest fails to deposit his goods accordingly. Spice v. Bacon, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 2 Ex. D. 463, 36 L. T. N. S. 896, 25 W. R. 840.

Innkeeper Not Relieved Against Defaults of Himself or Servants. — Spice v. Bacon, 2 Ex. D. 463, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 36 L. T. N. S. 896, 25 W. R. 840; Elcox v. Hill, 98 U. S. 218; Treiber v. Burrows, 27 Md. 130. See also the various local codes and statutes, many of which expressly declare that an innkeeper cannot limit his liability for the direct acts or omissions of himself or his servants.

Effect of Complying with Statute — Guest Must Prove Default. — Spice v. Bacon, 2 Ex. D. 463, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 36 L. T. N. S. 896, 25 W. R. 840; Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587; Elcox v. Hill, 98 U. S. 218.

5. Liability Not Affected by Failure to Deposit. — An illustration of the exception stated in the text is where the property of a guest is stolen after it has been packed preparatory to the departure of the guest. In such a case it is obvious that the loss could not have been prevented by depositing the property with the

As Regards Property Which Has Been Placed in His Custody by a guest pursuant to the statute and notice thereof, the liability of the innkeeper is in no way affected, but remains the same as at common law.¹

Limitation as to Amount. — In some jurisdictions the statutes limit the amount to which an innkeeper shall be liable, whether the property of the guest be committed to his special keeping or not.²

bb. TO WHOM STATUTES APPLY. — The statutes are usually made applicable to all innkeepers, but in some instances they are not so comprehensive.³

cc. PROPERTY CONTEMPLATED BY STATUTE. — The statutes usually contemplate property which is of such a kind or character as to be peculiarly subject to loss by theft or otherwise, and as a general rule they specify it with more or less particularity,⁴ though sometimes property of all kinds, with certain exceptions, is declared to be within the statute,⁵ and when the statute specifically names the kinds of property with respect to which the innkeeper may limit his liability, the court cannot, in any case, extend it to other articles, because the statutes, being in derogation of the common law, are to be strictly construed.⁶

Rule as to Articles Carried for Personal Use. — It is held that a reasonable amount of money for traveling expenses, and articles of personal use and convenience, though within the terms of the statute, are not within its spirit, and that a guest by retaining such articles in his own possession, instead of depositing them with the innkeeper, does not absolve the innkeeper from his common-innkeeper. Bendetson v. French, 46 N. Y. 266, reversing 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 31; Stanton v. Leland, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 88.

1. No Modification of Liability as to Goods Placed in Innkeeper's Custody. — Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, 4 Am. Rep. 655.

2. Limitation as to Amount. — The New York statute limits the amount for which an innkeeper shall be liable in any case to the sum of five hundred dollars. Briggs v. Todd, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 208; Bradner v. Mullen, (County Ct.) 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 479.

3. To Whom Statutes Apply. — See the various local codes and statutes.

The Alabama statute, by its terms, is limited to the keepers of inns or hotels in a city, and cannot be extended to towns or villages, or to inns or hotels situated in the country. Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 323; Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587; Code Ala. 1896, § 2541.

4. The Alabama and Georgia statutes designate "valuable articles." Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 323; Lanier v. Youngblood, 73 Ala. 587; Code Ala. 1896, § 2541; Murchison v. Sergeant, 69 Ga. 207, 47 Am. Rep. 754; Code Ga. 1895, § 2937.

The articles in respect to which an innkeeper may limit his liability under the Illinois statute are "money, jewelry, or other valuables of gold, silver, or rare precious stones." Elcox v. Hill, 98 U. S. 218; Starr & Curt. Ann. Stat. Ill., c. 71, par. 2.

The Maryland statute designates "money, jewelry, and plate." Maltby v. Chapman, 25 Md. 310.

The New York statute designates "the money, jewels, or ornaments." Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728.

Compare the statutes in other jurisdictions.

5. The English Statute protects the innkeeper with respect to property of every kind, except horses or other live animals. Spice v. Bacon, 2 Ex. D. 463, 46 L. J. Exch. 713, 36 L. T. N. S. 896, 25 W. R. 840; Stat. 26 & 27 Vict., c. 41.

6. Limitation Applicable only to Kinds of Property Named. — Maltby v. Chapman, 25 Md. 310; Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728.

Watches. — Within the rule stated in the text, it is held that the New York statute designating "money, jewels, or ornaments," does not include a watch of a reasonable value owned by a guest. Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728, 6 Robt. (N. Y.) 358; Becker v. Warner, 90 Hun (N. Y.) 187. And this holds good, though the case of the watch is engraved with a coat of arms, and has a picture of the owner's mother inside the cover, or has been laid aside in the owner's trunk temporarily. Briggs v. Todd, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 208.

In Kösenplaenter v. Roessle, 54 N. Y. 262, there is an expression by Earl, C., to the effect that a watch is within the New York statute, but it will be observed that no watch was involved in the litigation.

The Ohio statute which specifies "money, banknotes, jewelry, articles of gold and silver manufacture, precious stones, and bullion," includes a watch and chain. Lang v. Arcade Hotel Co., 12 Cinc. L. Bul. 253, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 372.

The provision of the Wisconsin statute relating to "money, jewelry, and articles of gold and silver manufacture," includes gold and silver watches and watch chains usually worn by guests about their persons. Stewart v. Parsons, 24 Wis. 241.

Table Silver. — It is also held that articles of table silver, such as forks and spoons, are not included in the designation "money, jewels, or ornaments." Briggs v. Todd, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 208.

law liability.¹ And in some instances the statutes expressly except such reasonable amount of money and articles of personal use.²

h. FORM OF ACTION. — It has been said that an action against an innkeeper for the loss of or an injury to a guest's goods while within the inn is founded on the implied contract of the innkeeper to keep safely the goods of his guests.³ On the other hand, it has been declared that the action sounds in tort, being founded on a breach of duty devolved by the law on the innkeeper by reason of his calling, and that this duty is imposed from considerations of public policy, without regard to any implied contract of bailment;⁴ and this view seems to be the one generally adopted.⁵

i. MEASURE OF DAMAGES. — Where the property of a guest is lost or stolen under such circumstances as, within the principles stated above, will render the innkeeper liable, the proper measure of damages is the market value of the property, that is, its value in the market open to the guest, at the time of the loss.⁶

In Case the Property Has No Market Value, then, of course, it is the actual value that is recoverable, and it would seem that such value is not merely what the property might have sold for in money at public or private sale, but its pecuniary value to the owner.⁷ This is the rule that has been laid down in other cases of bailment, and no reason is perceived why it should not apply equally to innkeepers.⁸

The Cost of the property lost or stolen, though not the measure of the guest's recovery,⁹ is still evidence which may be considered in connection

1. Articles of Personal Use or Convenience. — A guest is not bound to deposit with the innkeeper, for safekeeping, a watch or a sum of money amounting to ninety dollars. Maltby v. Chapman, 25 Md. 310.

Under the Georgia statute which specifies "valuable articles," it is held that a guest cannot be required to deposit a watch of reasonable value worn by him, or a reasonable sum had by him for the purpose of paying his traveling expenses. Murchison v. Sergeant, 60 Ga. 207, 47 Am. Rep. 754.

It Is a Question of Fact whether a sum of money stolen from a guest was reasonably necessary for traveling expenses. Maltby v. Chapman, 25 Md. 310. See also the next following note, Limitation Expressly Restricted by Statute.

On the Contrary, it has been held that the statutes apply to all property of the kind designated, and that there is no restriction as to such amounts or articles as may be in excess of what a guest may require for his traveling expenses or personal convenience. Hyatt v. Taylor, 42 N. Y. 258, affirming 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 632; Ramaley v. Leland, 43 N. Y. 539, 3 Am. Rep. 728, modifying 6 Robt. (N. Y.) 358; Rosenplaenter v. Roessle, 54 N. Y. 262, overruling Gile v. Libby, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 70.

2. Limitation Expressly Restricted by Statute. — Noble v. Miliken, 74 Me. 225, 43 Am. Rep. 581; Turner v. Whitaker, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 83, 43 W. N. C. (Pa.) 375. And see the statutes in other jurisdictions.

3. Action for Goods Lost Said to Be Ex Contractu. — Rockwell v. Proctor, 39 Ga. 105; Dickinson v. Winchester, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 114, 50 Am. Dec. 760.

4. Action for Loss of Guest's Goods Held to Sound in Tort. — Johnson v. Richardson, 17 Ill. 302, 63 Am. Dec. 369; People v. Willett, (Supm.

Ct. Spec. T.) 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 210, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 37.

5. In Morgan v. Ravey, 6 H. & N. 265, it was said by counsel, on the argument, that "there is no instance of an action against an innkeeper upon a promise to keep the goods of his guest safely. The form of action has always been case upon the custom of the realm." And from an examination of the cases cited in the foregoing notes, relative to the liability of innkeepers in respect to their guests' goods, it appears that the action is generally in the form of an action of trespass.

6. Measure of Damages — Market Value. — Kellogg v. Sweeny, 46 N. Y. 291, 7 Am. Rep. 333, dissenting opinion of Allen, J.; Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 54; Wies v. Hoffman House, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 225.

For a Full Discussion as to what is the market value of any commodity, see the title MARKET VALUE.

7. Pecuniary Value to Owner Recoverable in Absence of Market Value. — In Wies v. Hoffman House, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 225, the principle stated in the text seems to have been applied. In that case the plaintiff sued for certain articles of wearing apparel, and a toilet set and bag, which were stolen from his room while he was a guest at the defendant's inn, and his recovery was based on evidence as to the original cost of the several articles, the extent to which they had been used, and their condition at the time they were stolen. See also Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 54.

8. Analogous Cases. — See the titles BAGGAGE, vol. 3, p. 584; CARRIERS OF GOODS, vol. 5, p. 390.

9. Cost of Property Not Measure of Damage. — Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 54.

with other facts in determining the actual value.¹

Interest. — It has been held that, in an action against an innkeeper for the loss of goods committed to his charge, the jury may give interest on the amount of the goods lost, by way of damages, but they are not obliged to do so.² This does not seem, however, to be in accordance with the trend of modern opinion, because the same rule which was laid down by some earlier cases as applicable to carriers of goods has been generally abandoned by later decisions, and it may now be considered as well settled that where a carrier is liable for the loss of goods, the owner is entitled to interest on the value thereof from the time when they should have been delivered.³

j. EVIDENCE — Presumption Arising from Loss. — Whether innkeepers are held liable as insurers of the goods of their guests, or only for such losses as may happen without any fault or neglect on their part, the mere fact that goods of a guest are lost is presumptive evidence of such negligence in an action against an innkeeper, and the onus then rests on him to bring the case within one of the exceptions recognized by law.⁴

Admissions of Servants. — According to the well-known rule of evidence that the admissions of an agent are not binding on the principal, unless the agent was acting within the scope of his authority at the time, and the admission related to some transaction then depending, an admission of a servant of an innkeeper that he had stolen the property of a guest is not admissible against the innkeeper.⁵ Neither can a statement by a servant as to the contents of a package delivered to him by a guest for safekeeping be admitted against the innkeeper, where the servant was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time.⁶

Plaintiff as Witness in His Own Behalf. — In an action by a guest against an innkeeper for the loss of goods infra hospitium the plaintiff is not within the common-law rule that a party is not competent as a witness in his own behalf, and therefore he may testify as to the fact of loss and the value of the goods. This is one of the exceptions to the general rule, in odium spoliatoris.⁷ But the exception is of comparatively little importance now, because of the modern statutes removing the disqualification of parties as witnesses.⁸

4. Liability for Personal Injuries to Guests — a. IN GENERAL. — In the leading case on the subject it was said that innkeepers are liable for injuries in respect to the goods only of their guests, and not for injuries to the person.⁹ But that case was decided a long time ago (in the year 1584), and did not

In Kentucky, it was provided by a former statute (Civ. Code, § 670) that "persons interested in an issue in behalf of themselves, and parties to an issue in behalf of themselves, or those united with them in the issue," should be incompetent to testify; and it was held that under this provision the exception to the common-law rule stated in the text did not obtain, because the statute was absolute in its terms and did not authorize the court to make any exceptions. Packard v. Northcraft, 2 Met. (Ky.) 439.

The present statute is materially different, and provides that "no person shall testify for himself in chief in an ordinary action, after introducing other testimony for himself in chief; nor in an equitable action after taking other testimony for himself in chief." Code Ky. 1895, § 606, subd. 4.

9. In Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32, it was said: "If the guest be beaten in the inn, the innkeeper shall not answer for it; for the injury ought to be done to his movables which be actually involve any question of liability for personal injuries; and it may well be doubted whether it would not be accepted as authority for the proposition that it lays down. Indeed, though the reported cases involving this question are very few, they all look the other way.¹

b. ASSAULT AND BATTERY — (1) By Innkeeper. — It is obvious that since an innkeeper may, for certain causes, refuse to receive persons offering themselves as guests, and may eject them after they have been received, he cannot be held liable as for an assault and battery in effecting such ejection, if he used no more force than was necessary for that purpose.² It is equally obvious that in case of an ordinary personal encounter between an innkeeper and his guest, or of violence inflicted by the one on the other, which is not in pursuance of any purpose of ejecting the guest, the innkeeper's liability would be governed by the general principles applicable to assaults and batteries.³

(2) By Servant of Innkeeper. — It Is a General Rule that a master is liable for the tortious acts of his servant, committed while the servant was engaged in the execution of some matter which was within the real or apparent scope of the duties intrusted to him, even though he acted wantonly or maliciously.⁴

In the Case of Carriers of Passengers this rule is carried still further by some late authorities, and a distinct doctrine is laid down as applicable to that class of persons. This doctrine is that the carrier is liable for the wilful and malicious acts of its servants resulting in injuries to passengers, whether done in the line of their employment or not, if done in the course of the discharge of their duty relating to passengers. And the ground on which the doctrine rests is that the carrier, as a part of the contract of carriage, is bound to protect the passenger from all tortious acts of its servants.⁵

As to Innkeepers, it would seem, on principle, that at least the general rule governing the liability of a master for the torts of his servant would be applicable, but a dictum in the leading English case already referred to states a radically different rule, namely, that "if the guest be beaten in the inn, the innkeeper shall not answer for it."⁶ The question of an innkeeper's liability for the assault and battery of a guest by a servant seems to have received little attention since the dictum above mentioned was uttered, but the tenor of modern authority is that an innkeeper is liable for assaults committed by his servants on guests, according to the general principles governing the ordinary relation of master and servant, at least;⁷ and there are some intimations that the rule in regard to carriers of passengers should be applied.⁸

(3) By Other Guests and Strangers. — If the early doctrine of nonliability on the part of innkeepers for personal violence to their guests were accepted, it would follow that no liability could be predicated on an assault and battery by another guest or by a stranger;⁹ but the contrary of this was long ago brings with him; and by the words of the writ, the innholder ought to keep the goods and chattels of his guest, and not his person."

8. Applicability of Rule Governing Carriers of Passengers. — In Wade v. Thayer, 40 Cal. 578, cited in the next preceding note, and holding that an innkeeper is liable for an assault and battery on a guest committed by servants of the innkeeper in the performance of their duties as such, the court referred to the case of Turner v. North Beach, etc., R. Co., 34 Cal. 594, which was an action against a carrier of passengers for an alleged violent and unlawful ejection of a passenger from a car, and said that the question "was fully discussed and the authorities cited" in that case, "and need not be further noticed."

And in Rommel v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. St. 579, 6 Am. St. Rep. 732, a carrier case, the case of Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Pillow, 76 Pa. St. 510, 18 Am. Rep. 424, is relied on as an analogous authority for the proposition that it is the duty of an innkeeper to protect his guests from violence.

9. Early Rule — Nonliability for Assaults by Other Guests and Strangers. — In Calye's Case,

c. DEFECTIVE OR UNSANITARY CONDITION OF INN. — Whatever may have been the innkeeper's liability for personal injuries sustained by a guest, it is now well settled that in case of an injury occurring in consequence of the dangerous or defective condition of the inn premises, the innkeeper is liable on the same principles as are applicable in other cases where persons coming on premises at the invitation of the owner or occupant thereof, or by his license, are injured in consequence of the dangerous condition of such premises.³ But his liability extends no further than this; he is not an insurer of the personal safety of his guests.⁴

d. UNWHOLESOME FOOD. — It is the duty of an innkeeper to provide his guests with wholesome food, and if he is negligent in the performance of this duty, in consequence of which negligence a guest is injured, the innkeeper is liable in damages; but a case of negligence must be made against him, because he is not held, as respects the guest's person, to the same degree of responsibility as the law imposes in respect to the guest's goods.⁵

e. INJURIES CAUSED BY FIRE. — The statutory duty of innkeepers to provide fire escapes has already been considered.⁶ In the absence of such a statutory requirement no duty to provide fire escapes is imposed by law, and therefore liability for personal injuries caused by fire can be predicated only

8 Coke 32, no distinction was made between assaults made by the servants of the innkeeper and those made by other guests or strangers, but the court stated broadly that "if the guest be beaten in the inn, the innkeeper shall not answer for it."

1. Later Rule. — The first case arising after the decision in Calye's Case, 8 Coke 32, cited in the next preceding note, was Newton v. Trigg, 1 Show. 268, in which Eyres, J., in enumerating the duties of an innkeeper, says that he is "compellable to keep the assize, and to prevent tippling."

2. Modern Rule — Innkeeper Held Liable for Assaults by Other Guests. — Rommel v. Schambacher, 120 Pa. St. 579, 6 Am. St. Rep. 732.

3. Innkeeper Bound to Maintain Premises in Safe Condition. — Ten Broeck v. Wells, 47 Fed. Rep. 690; West v. Thomas, 97 Ala. 622, citing 16 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 414; Stanley v. Bircher, 78 Mo. 245.

One who keeps a public house (i. e., an inn or hotel) extends an implied invitation to all to come on his premises, and is therefore liable for injuries sustained in consequence of the bad condition of such premises. Oxford v. Prior, 14 W. R. 611.

Duty Cannot Be Delegated. — Stott v. Churchill, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 80, affirmed 157 N. Y. 692.

Guest Injured by Fall of Ceiling. — In Sandys v. Florence, 47 L. J. C. Pl. 598, it was held that a guest who was injured by the fall of a ceiling in the inn was entitled to recover against the innkeeper, if the accident was due to the innkeeper's negligence.

Places Where Guests Are Not Reasonably Expected to Go. — The general duty of an innkeeper to take proper care for the safety of his guests does not extend to every room in his house at all hours of the night or day, but must be limited to those places into which guests may be reasonably supposed to be likely to go, in a reasonable belief that they are entitled or invited to do so. Walker v.

Midland R. Co., 55 L. T. N. S. 489, 51 J. P. 116.

Communication of Infectious Disease. — Where an innkeeper, with knowledge of the prevalence of smallpox in his hotel, kept it open for business, and permitted a person to become a guest without informing her of the presence of the disease, it was held that the innkeeper would be liable to the guest if she contracted the disease while in the house, and was herself guilty of no negligence contributing to the injury. Gilbert v. Hoffman, 66 Iowa 205, 55 Am. Rep. 263.

Defective Elevator. — In Stott v. Churchill, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 80, affirmed 157 N. Y. 692, it was held that a guest at a hotel was entitled to recover for injuries caused by the fall of a passenger elevator in the hotel, if the hotel keeper was chargeable with negligence in allowing the elevator to become unsafe. See the title ELEVATORS, vol. 10, p. 944.

Waiver of Defects. — Where a person had been a guest of a hotel for such time that he knew, or had an opportunity to know, all about the alleged defective construction which, it was claimed, was the cause of his injury, and he yet voluntarily elected to occupy the room, it was held that he must be considered as having elected to take the chances. Glass v. Colman, 14 Wash. 635.

4. Limits of Liability. — Sneed v. Moorehead, 70 Miss. 690.

The General Rule of Law governing the liability of an innkeeper is, that he is not an insurer of the person of his guest against injury, but his obligation is merely to exercise reasonable care that his guests may not be injured by anything happening through the innkeeper's negligence. Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 495, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 32.

5. Liability for Furnishing Unwholesome Food. — Sheffer v. Willoughby, 163 Ill. 518, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483, affirming 61 Ill. App. 263.

on negligence in the occurrence of the fire and the attendant circumstances.¹ But when the duty is imposed by statute, a failure in that respect renders the innkeeper liable to any guest who may be injured in consequence,² unless such guest had waived the provisions of the statute.³

5. Securing and Enforcing Right to Compensation — a. LIEN ON GOODS OF GUESTS — (1) The Right in General — (a) Innkeepers Proper. — Corresponding to the extraordinary liabilities which the law imposes on innkeepers, is the extraordinary privilege of a lien on the effects of guests for the amount of the reasonable charges for the guests' entertainment,⁴ and in many jurisdictions the right to such lien is expressly declared by statute.⁵ It is essential to the existence of the lien that the goods on which it is claimed should have been brought to the inn by a person coming in the character of a guest,⁶ but it is

1. Duty to Provide Fire Escapes Purely Statutory. — See the title FIRE ESCAPES, vol. 13, p. 82.

There Is No Presumption that a fire by which an inn was burned was due to negligence of the innkeeper. Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 495.

2. Effect of Failure to Comply with Statute. — See the title FIRE ESCAPES, vol. 13, p. 85. See also the title FIRES, vol. 13, p. 404.

Injury Not Resulting from Want of Fire Escape. — If the injury did not occur in consequence of the want of a fire escape, the innkeeper cannot be held liable. Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 495, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 32.

Though the Guest Is an Infant, his baggage is nevertheless subject to the innkeeper's lien for the price of his entertainment, if furnished in good faith without the knowledge that the infant was acting improperly and contrary to the wishes of his guardian. Watson v. Cross, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 147.

Married Women. — It has been held that where a husband and wife stop at an inn, and the wife has effects with her which are her separate property, the innkeeper is entitled to a lien thereon for their entertainment. Gordon v. Silber, 25 Q. B. D. 491.

In a New York case there is a dictum to the effect that an innkeeper has no lien on the property of a married woman for a debt contracted by her husband for their entertainment at the inn. McIlvaine v. Hilton, 7 Hun (N.

Y.) 594. But in another case it was held that the landlord was entitled to a lien, where the married woman was the head of the family, the one to whom credit was given, and she had money while her husband had none. *Birney v. Where an Innkeeper Receives Horses and a Carriage to Stand at a Livery, the circumstance of the owner, at a subsequent period, taking occasional refreshment at the inn, or sending a friend to be lodged there at his charge, will not entitle the innkeeper to a lien in respect of any part of his demand. Smith v. Dearlove, 6 C. B. 132, 60 E. C. L. 132, 17 L. J. C. Pl. 219, 12 Jur. 377. See also Dixon v. Dalby, 11 U. C. Q. B. 79.

Horses Left at Inn for Treatment. — Whether an innkeeper with whom a horse was left to be kept and cured has a lien on him for his keep, where neither the owner of the horse, nor the person having him in charge, was entertained at the inn when the horse was left there, has been doubted. Lord v. Jones, 24 Me. 439, 41 Am. Dec. 391; Miller v. Marston, 35 Me. 153, 56 Am. Dec. 694. See also Allen v. Ham, 63 Me. 532.

No Lien as Against Boarder. — An innkeeper has a lien on the goods of a guest, but not on those of a boarder. Pollock v. Landis, 36 not essential that the guest should in all cases be the owner of the goods.¹

(b) Boarding-house and Lodging-house Keepers. — The keepers of boarding-houses, lodging-houses, and like establishments, not being subject, at common law, to the extraordinary liabilities imposed on innkeepers, were not entitled to the corresponding privilege of a lien on the effects of their boarders or lodgers;² but the tendency of recent legislation has been to extend this privilege, and a lien is now given by statute in many jurisdictions to the keepers of such houses,³ and in some jurisdictions they are given a lien on the wages of their Special Contract for Lien. — Though an innkeeper is not entitled to a lien as such on the property of a person not coming to the inn as a guest, still such lien may be created by special agreement of the parties. Crabtree v. Griffith, 22 U. C. Q. B. 573.

An Intimation Contrary to the Rule Stated in the Text seems to be contained in the case of Peet v. McGraw, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 653. But in Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663, the court comments on this case as follows: "We are referred to the case of Peet v. McGraw, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 653, to prove that it is not necessary to the lien, or the liability of the innkeeper, that the owner should be a guest. The case decides no such thing. It turned on the construction of the plea, and we thought the words of the plea equivalent to an averment that the owner was a guest. A single expression of the chief justice, which was not necessary to the decision of the cause, is separated from the context, and pressed into the plaintiff's service. But neither the chief justice nor any other member of the court intended to say, that either the lien or the liability could exist where the owner of the goods was not either actually or constructively the guest of the innkeeper. There must be such a relation."

Whether the Boarder Is Transient or Permanent is immaterial under the New York Act of 1860. The keeper of a boarding-house has a lien in either case. Stewart v. McCready, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 62.

So, too, the statute gives the right to a lien in the case of special contracts for board at a fixed rate by the week or month, though an innkeeper under such circumstances would have no lien. Misch v. O'Hara, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 361.

Persons Not Engaged in Business of Taking Boarders. — In New York it has been held that a housekeeper who receives a person into his family for an indefinite time as a boarder, but who is not accustomed to take persons to board, is not entitled to the lien given by the Act of 1860. Cady v. McDowell, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 484.

Married Women. — A boarding-house keeper has no lien on the effects of a wife, for a debt contracted by her husband for their board. Mellvaine v. Hilton, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 594. Or even where the board was furnished the woman and her husband under a joint contract to charge both with board. Birney v. Wheaton, (N. Y. City Ct. Gen. T.) 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 347. See also supra, this division of this section, Innkeepers Proper, note Married Women.

In Baker v. Stratton, 52 N. J. L. 277, it was held that a boarding-house keeper has no lien on the separate property of a married woman boarding at the house, but living apart from her husband, where the husband has engaged, and by express agreement promised to pay, her board.

Property Exempt from Execution by Statute is nevertheless subject to a boarding-house keeper's lien, when such a lien is given by statute. Thorn v. Whitbeck, (County Ct.) 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 171, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 39. See also infra, this division of this section, To What Lien Attaches, paragraph Property Exempt from Execution.

Extent of Boarding-house Keeper's Lien. — The New Hampshire statute giving boarding-house keepers a lien on the effects of their boarders is limited by its terms to the fare and board, and does not cover the cost of keeping boarders or lodgers for the price of the entertainment furnished.¹

(2) To What Lien Attaches — (a) Property Belonging to Guests. — Obviously, in the absence of statutory restrictions, all the property belonging to a guest and brought with him to the inn is subject to the innkeeper's lien. This proposition is embraced in the general rule stated above, as to the existence of the right to a lien.²

Property Exempt from Execution is nevertheless subject to the innkeeper's lien, at least in case the exemption is statutory.³

But Wearing Apparel on the Person of a Guest cannot be taken from him and held by the innkeeper.⁴

Wages of Guests. — In some jurisdictions the innkeeper's lien is extended by statute to the wages of guests.⁵

Horses Employed in the Transportation of the United States Mail cannot be detained by an innkeeper for his charges for the entertainment of the owner while stopping with such horses at the inn.⁶

(b) Property of Third Persons in Possession of Guests. — It is well settled that the lien of an innkeeper will attach to goods brought to the inn by a guest, though they are not really the guest's property, if they were received by the innkeeper on the faith of the innkeeping relation,⁷ and though they are not ordinary the boarder's property. Cross v. Wilkins, 43 N. H. 332.

Under the New York statute of 1860, the lien of the keeper of a boarding house is co-extensive with that of an innkeeper at common law, extending to all goods brought on the premises by a boarder though in fact the property of a stranger. Jones v. Morrill, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 623.

But the lien is restricted to the amount which may be due for board, and cannot be extended to any other indebtedness, nor to any demand not due at the time of the detention. Shafer v. Guest, 6 Robt. (N. Y.) 264, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 184.

The Quebec statute (39 Vict., c. 23), giving a lien on the effects of a boarder for the amount due from him for board, applies to the price of the board only, and does not extend to charges for the custody of effects left behind by the boarder. Ferguson v. Riendeau, 2 Montreal Super. Ct. 136, 9 Montreal Leg. N. 135. Compare, in this respect, the statutes in other jurisdictions.

1. Lien on Wages Given by Statute. — Hodo v. Benecke, 11 Mo. App. 393; Walker v. Kennedy, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 433, 7 Pa. Dist. 516; Hawk v. Rock, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 490; Thomas v. Glasgow, 13 Pa. 2. See supra, this division of this section, The Right in General.

Within the principle that the lien of an innkeeper is general and extends to all goods and chattels belonging to his guest, a chattel, though deposited with the innkeeper and placed by him apart from the personal goods of the guest, may be detained by him on account of money owing to him for the lodging, food, and entertainment of the guest. Mulliner v. Florence, 47 L. J. Q. B. 700, 3 Q. B. D. 434, 38 L. T. N. S. 167, 26 W. R. 385.

The Missouri statute confines the lien to the "baggage and other valuables of the guest," and does not cover the goods of third persons taken to the inn by the guest. Wyckoff v. Southern Hotel Co., 24 Mo. App. 382.

Only the Property of the Defaulting Guest is subject to the lien, and the innkeeper has no right to detain the baggage of any other, though in the same company. Kennedy v. Muller, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 445. See also Clayton v. Butterfield, 10 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 300.

traveler's luggage if the fact as to the ownership was not known to the innkeeper.¹ In some jurisdictions this principle has been affirmed by statute,² while the statutes in other jurisdictions either abrogate it entirely or modify it.³ And in some cases it has been questioned whether the rule of the common law, which extends the innkeeper's lien to the goods of a third person brought to the inn by a guest does not conflict with the constitutional guaranties against depriving the citizen of his property without due process of law.⁴

Husband's Property in Possession of Wife. — Under the Massachusetts statute giving boarding-house keepers a lien on the baggage and effects brought to their houses belonging to their guests or boarders, for all proper charges due for fare and board, it has been held that where, by a husband's neglect and cruelty towards his wife and child, they were driven from his house, and in his absence the wife took her child and certain goods belonging to the husband, and went to a boarding house, no lien was created on the husband's goods, though the wife left her husband under such circumstances that she carried his credit with her, and he was liable for the board of herself and child. Mills v. Shirley, 110 Mass. 159.

Credit Given to Husband — Separate Property of Wife. — The defendants, husband and wife, stayed at the plaintiffs' hotel. The wife had with her a quantity of luggage, which was her separate property. Credit was given to the husband, who made payments on account. The balance of the plaintiffs' bill not being paid, the plaintiffs detained the wife's luggage in the alleged exercise of their right of lien. It was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a lien on the goods, notwithstanding that they were the separate property of the wife. Gordon v. Silber, 59 L. J. Q. B. 507, 25 Q. B. D. 491, 63 L. T. N. S. 283, 39 W. R. 111, 55 J. P. 134.

Property Held under Color of Legal Proceeding. — An innkeeper has a lien on a horse for his keep, though the guest had wrongfully seized the horse under color of a legal proceeding against the owner, unless the innkeeper knew that the party making the seizure was a wrongdoer at the time it was made, and such knowledge is a question for the jury. Johnson v. Hill, 3 Stark. 172, 14 E. C. L. 176 n., 23 Rev. Rep. 764.

Goods Brought to Inn by Commercial Traveler. — In Robins v. Gray, (1895) 2 Q. B. 501, 14 Reports 671, affirming (1895) 2 Q. B. 78, a commercial traveler, employed by the firm which dealt in sewing machines, went to stay at an inn, and while there machines were sent to him by the firm in the ordinary course of business, for the purpose of selling them to customers in the neighborhood. Before the goods were sent the innkeeper had express notice that they were the property of the firm, but he received them as the baggage of the traveler, who afterwards left the inn without paying his bill for board and lodging. It was held that the innkeeper had a lien on the machines for the amount of his bill. See also Fugarty v. Dion, 6 Quebec 163; Brown Shoe Co. v. Hunt, 103 Iowa 586; Manning v. Hollenbeck, 27 Wis. 202. But see contra, Torrey v. McClellan, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 371, decided under the Texas statute.

1. Goods Not Ordinary Traveler's Luggage. — The innkeeper's lien extends to articles brought with him by the guest as his own, but which (as for instance a piano) are not ordinary traveler's luggage. Threfall v. Borwick, L. R. 7 Q. B. 711, affirmed L. R. 10 Q. B. 210, 44 L. J. Exch. 87.

In Cook v. Kane, 13 Oregon 482, 57 Am. Rep. 28, also, a lien was claimed and allowed on a piano brought to the inn by a guest, though it was the property of a third person, the innkeeper not being aware of that fact.

2. Brown Shoe Co. v. Hunt, 103 Iowa 589. Compare the statutes in other jurisdictions.

3. Statutory Provisions. — The New Hampshire statute, which gives a lien on animals "entrusted" to any person to be pastured or boarded, refers to animals entrusted by the owner or some person having authority to pledge them for such a purpose. Sargent v. Usher, 55 N. H. 287, 20 Am. Rep. 208.

Under the South Dakota statute it is held that the rule of the common law is changed, and that the innkeeper is not entitled to a lien on the property of third persons in possession of a guest. McClain v. Williams, 11 S. Dak. 227.

Under the Texas statute an innkeeper has no lien on the trunks and samples of a commercial traveler, for the cost of the traveler's entertainment, where the innkeeper knew that they were not the property of the traveler. Torrey v. McClellan, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 371.

Under the Georgia statute, if the guest is not the real owner of the article on which the innkeeper claims a lien, or if there be a prior legal incumbrance on it, the innkeeper's lien is only good against the true owner or prior incumbrancer for the expense of feeding or taking care of that particular article. *Domestic Sewing Mach. furnishes entertainment to a mail carrier who stops at his inn with horses owned by the United States and employed in the mail service is not entitled to a lien on such horses.¹

The Fact that the Innkeeper Knew that the Guest Was Not the Owner does not affect the right to a lien, however, if the goods are such as a traveler might ordinarily carry with him.² If, on the other hand, goods, not being of such kind or character, are brought to the inn with the innkeeper's knowledge that they are the property of a third person, no lien attaches;³ and the rule is the same if the guest was illegally in possession of the property, and the innkeeper knew that fact.⁴

(c) Person of Guest. — There is a dictum in an early case to the effect that an innkeeper may detain the persons of his guests until payment of the charges for their entertainment,⁵ but it has since been decided that no such right exists.⁶

(3) To What Charges Lien Extends. — The innkeeper's lien extends to the entire charge for the guest's entertainment, and is not limited, where the rights of third persons intervene, to what would have been a reasonable expenditure by the guest;⁷ nor can it be limited to the charge of keeping the property on which the lien is claimed, where such a charge can be made, as in the case of a guest's horse.⁸

Money Loaned to Guest. — It has also been held that an innkeeper has a lien for money loaned to his guest, if it was agreed between them at the time of the loans that the guest's goods should be security for the loans.⁹

(4) Loss or Waiver of Lien — Loss of Lien. — If an innkeeper, who holds the goods of a guest by virtue of his innkeeper's lien, suffers them to be taken

3. Goods Not Brought by Guest as His Own. — In Broadwood v. Granara, 10 Exch. 417, 24 L. J. Exch. 1, 1 Jur. N. S. 19, 3 W. R. 25, 3 C. L. R. 177, the owner of a piano loaned it to a professional pianist who was, at the time, staying as a guest at the defendant's inn, and the defendant knew the fact as to the ownership of the piano. It was held that the defendant had no lien on the piano for a bill due from the guest.

5. Lien on Person of Guest Asserted. — Newton v. Trigg, 1 Show. 238, per Eyres, J.; Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers (D), where it is said that "innkeepers may detain the person of the guest who eats." See also Carlisle v. Quattlebaum, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 452, citing Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers (D). The only other case that seems ever to have been cited in support of this proposition is Ward v. Clarke, an unreported case referred to in 9 Wentworth's Pleader 362.

As to these cases, Lord Abinger says that the utterance of Eyres, J., in Newton v. Trigg, 1 Show. 368, "was not only an obiter dictum, but a very wide divaricating dictum;" and he disposes of the case of Ward v. Clarke by saying that "Wentworth's Pleader is a book of no authority; it is a collection of very vicious precedents." Sunbolf v. Alford, 3 M. & W. 248, 1 H. & H. 13, 2 Jur. 110, 7 L. J. Exch. 60.

6. Innkeeper Held Not Entitled to Lien on Person of Guest. — Sunbolf v. Alford, 3 M. & W. 248, 1 H. & H. 13, 2 Jur. 110, 7 L. J. Exch. 60. See also Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 485, 38 Am. Dec. 603, in which it is said that "it was once held that he might detain the person of the guest, but that doctrine is now exploded, and the lien is confined to the goods."

7. Lien Extends to Entire Charge for Entertainment. — Black v. Brennan, 5 Dana (Ky.) 311. Compare McManigle v. Crouse, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 43, 34 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 384.

8. Amount of Lien as Against Execution Creditor of Guest. — In Proctor v. Nicholson, 7 C. & P. 67, 32 E. C. L. 440, it was held that an innkeeper had a lien on the goods of a guest for board and lodging, and wine supplied to such guest's order, whatever might be the amount, provided the guest was possessed of his reason, and was not an infant; and therefore the sheriff, under a fi. fa. against the guest, could only take the guest's goods, subject to the lien of the landlord for such amount regardless of whether the quantity of wines, etc., was reasonable.

9. Lien Extends to Entertainment of Guest as Well as Keep of Property. — Mulliner v. Florence, 3 Q. B. D. 484, 26 W. R. 385, 47 L. J. Q. B. 700, 38 L. T. N. S. 167.

10. Lien for Money Loaned to Guest. — Proctor v. Nicholson, 7 C. & P. 67, 32 E. C. L. 440.

11. Money Loaned to Infant Guest. — Where an innkeeper furnishes money to an infant guest, and it is expended for necessaries, the innkeeper is entitled to a lien for the amount thereof. Watson v. Cross, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 147.

away, and no fraud has been practised on him, the lien is lost, and it is not reinstated by the fact that the guest again comes to the inn bringing the goods with him.¹

The Lien Is Waived, if the innkeeper sells the goods in order to reimburse himself.² But it is not waived by accepting security from the guest for the payment of the charges against him, unless there is something in the nature of the security, or in the circumstances under which it was taken, which is inconsistent with the existence or continuance of the lien and therefore destructive of it.³ It has also been held that the lien is not waived by a failure to assert it on refusing to deliver the goods to a chattel mortgagee when possession was demanded under the mortgage,⁴ nor by a verbal promise to send home the subject of the lien, made in consideration of the verbal promise of a third person to pay the amount necessary to discharge the lien.⁵

(5) Care of Property Held under Lien. — An innkeeper retaining the goods of his guest by virtue of his lien thereon for his charges is not bound to use greater care in keeping them than he exercises in regard to his own goods of a similar description.⁶

(6) Enforcement of Lien. — At Common Law the innkeeper's remedy by way of a lien on his guests' effects extended no further than to give him the right to detain said effects until payment of his charges. He could not sell the effects detained,⁷ except in London and Exeter, by virtue of local customs.⁸ There is nothing, however, to prevent an innkeeper from obtaining a judgment at law for the amount due him, and enforcing such judgment by execution against the goods held by him under his lien.⁹

Equity Has Jurisdiction, according to some authorities, to entertain a suit for the enforcement of a common-law lien, such as the lien of an innkeeper,¹⁰ but the rule laid down in these cases seems to be opposed to the weight of authority.¹¹

1. Lien Terminated by Voluntarily Parting with Goods if Not Induced by Fraud. — Hickman v. Thomas, 16 Ala. 666; Manning v. Hollenbeck, 27 Wis. 202. This is a general principle of the law of bailments. See the title BAILMENTS, vol. 3, p. 760. Compare Huffman v. Walterhouse, 19 Ont. 186.

A Sale made in good faith, of property held under a boarding-house keeper's lien, does not terminate the lien, where the sale was made without the knowledge of the boarding-house keeper; but the lien remains valid and effectual for board furnished after the sale, under the original contract for board, until notice of the sale is given or the property is removed. Bayley v. Merrill, 10 Allen (Mass.) 360.

2. Sale of Goods Held a Waiver of Lien. — Mulliner v. Florence, 47 L. J. Q. B. 700, 3 Q. B. D. 484, 38 L. T. N. S. 167, 26 W. R. 385.

As to the rule that the right of lien does not, in the absence of statute, include the right to sell the goods, see infra, this section, Enforcement of Lien.

3. Taking Security for Charges Not Ordinarily a Waiver of the Lien. — Angus v. McLachlan, 23 Ch. D. 330, 52 L. J. Ch. 587, 48 L. T. N. S. 863, 31 W. R. 641.

4. Failure to Assert Lien. — Corbett v. Cushing, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 170.

5. Promise to Return Property. — Danforth v. Pratt, 42 Me. 50.

6. Care of Property Held under Lien. — Angus v. McLachlan, 23 Ch. D. 330, 52 L. J. Ch. 587, 48 L. T. N. S. 863, 31 W. R. 641; Frank v. Berryman, 3 British Columbia 506. See also the title BAILMENTS, vol. 3, p. 732.

7. Sale to Enforce Lien Not Authorized at Common Law. — Mulliner v. Florence, 3 Q. B. D. 484; People v. Husband, 36 Mich. 306; Case v. Fogg, 46 Mo. 44; Fox v. McGregor, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 41. But see the dictum of Popham, C. J., to the contrary in Hostler's Case, Yelv. 66.

8. "By the Custom of London and Exeter, if a man commit a horse to a hostler [innkeeper], and he eat out the price of his head, the hostler [innkeeper] may take him as his own, upon the reasonable appraisement of four of his neighbors; which was, it seems, a custom arising from the abundance of traffic with strangers, that could not be known, to charge them with the action; but the innkeeper hath no power to sell the horse by the general custom of the whole kingdom." Bac. Abr., tit. Inns and Innkeepers (D). See also Jones v. Pearle, 1 Stra. 556; Jones v. Thurloe, 8 Mod. 172; Pohtonier v. Dawson, Holt N. P. 383, 3 E. C. L. 154; Waldbroke v. Griffin, 2 Rol. Abr. 85.

10. Innkeeper's Lien Held Enforceable by Bill in Equity. — Black v. Brennan, 5 Dana (Ky.) 310; Fox v. McGregor, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 41. See also 2 Kent Com. 642.

11. Jurisdiction of Equity to Enforce Common-law Liens Denied. — The author of Jones on Liens says: "Generally a court of equity has no jurisdiction to enforce a common-law lien by sale merely because there is no remedy at law, or because the retaining of possession under a passive lien involves expense or incon-

Statutory Power of Sale. — The ineffectiveness of the innkeeper's lien for the purpose of enforcing his charges against delinquent guests has been remedied, both in England and in the United States, by modern statutes authorizing the sale of goods held under such a lien,¹ and where a lien on the wages of guests is given by statute, a remedy for its enforcement has been given also, viz., by garnishment or attachment proceedings against the employers of the guests.²

Statutory Lien of Boarding-house Keepers, etc. — In those jurisdictions where a lien is given, by statute, to boarding-house keepers, etc., and a mode of enforcing it is prescribed, such mode of enforcement is exclusive of all others, the rule being that where a statute creates a right which did not exist before, and provides a remedy for the enforcement of it, such remedy must be pursued.³

b. ACTION FOR PRICE OF ENTERTAINMENT. — Since an innkeeper receives and entertains his guests under a contract, sometimes express, though usually implied, that the guests will pay the amount of the innkeeper's charges, it is perfectly obvious that the relation of debtor and creditor is created, and that an action in the proper form will lie for the enforcement of the debt, as in any other case where that relation exists,⁴ unless the innkeeper was doing business as such without a license in a jurisdiction where the statute requires a license.⁵

Satisfaction of Judgment. — When a judgment has been recovered by an innkeeper for the price of entertainment furnished a guest, it is plain that it may be enforced by execution, like any other judgment; and though at common law an innkeeper's lien was not enforceable by a sale of the guest's goods, no reason is perceived why the execution may not be levied on such goods, and a sale had thereunder.⁶

venience. Generally a lien at law, or by statute, can be enforced only under express statutory provisions. An equitable form of procedure may be expressly provided; but in the absence of such provision a lien cannot be enforced in equity unless jurisdiction is acquired under well-established rules." Stolen Property brought to an inn by a guest, though sometimes subject to the innkeeper's lien (see supra, this section, To What Lien Attaches), is not within the provision of the Pennsylvania statute giving innkeepers power to sell under their lien, and therefore such a sale does not divest the title of the real owner. Gump v. Showalter, 43 Pa. St. 507.

2. Garnishment or Attachment of Guests' Wages. — Clark v. Haydock, 44 Mo. App. 367; Weisman v. Weisman, 133 Pa. St. 89; Smith v. Dingus, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 299; Hawk v. Rock, 14 Pa. Co. for the cost of the entertainment of the whole party, and not merely each for his own share;¹ but if some member or members of the party came on the invitation of the other or others, and the innkeeper knew that fact, the invited members are not liable to the innkeeper.²

6. Keeping Disorderly House. — The keeper of an inn who conducts himself in such a manner, either in the entertainment of travelers or other persons, as to violate public order and decorum, or shock the religious sense and feelings of the neighborhood, is guilty of a nuisance at common law, and may be indicted, fined, and imprisoned, and his house suppressed.³ He is also criminally liable for violations of the statutes regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors,⁴ or those designed for the suppression of gambling;⁵ and various statutes have been enacted regulating the business of innkeeping, and prescribing penalties for noncompliance therewith.⁶

7. Criminal Liability of Guests. — In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted for the protection of innkeepers against fraudulent practices by which they are deprived of their compensation for entertainment furnished. These statutes, while varying somewhat in terms, are uniform in design, and generally declare guilty of a misdemeanor any person who obtains food or accommodation at an inn without paying therefor, with the intent to defraud the innkeeper, or who obtains credit by the use of any false pretenses, or who, after obtaining credit, absconds without paying the charges against him.⁷

Room Used for Gambling Without Knowledge of Innkeeper. — An innkeeper who rents a room in his house, in good faith, to be used as a bedroom, and who has no control over it, is not responsible if it be used without his knowledge, by a lessee of his tenant, to set up a faro bank. Com. v. Watson, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 409.

Keeping a Billiard Table is a breach of a tavern keeper's bond against keeping a "gambling table of any description." People v. Harrison, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 247.

Strict Construction of Statute Required. — A statute providing for the punishment of frauds perpetrated by guests on innkeepers must be strictly construed in accordance with the rule relating to penal statutes; and where it provides for imprisonment, regard must also be had to the constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt. Hutchinson v. Davis, 58 Ill. App. 358.

But it has been held that such a statute is not unconstitutional as an attempt to imprison for debt. State v. Benson, 28 Minn. 424. See the title IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT AND IN CIVIL ACTIONS, p. 12, ante.

What Constitutes False Pretense. — A false pretense, in order to come within the Missouri statute punishing any person who shall obtain board or lodging at a hotel by false pretenses must relate to an existing or past fact, and not to the future; and therefore a person is not punishable for making a false promise, when about to leave a hotel, as to payment for board, most of which he had obtained before that time. State v. Tull, 42 Mo. App. 324. See also State v. Kingsley, 108 Mo. 135. And see generally the title FALSE PRETENSES AND CHEATS, vol. 12, p. 792.

A Surreptitious Removal of Baggage by a guest within the meaning of the Illinois statute is not established merely by evidence that he went away and took his baggage, and that neither the innkeeper nor any of his agents knew he was going nor that he was taking his baggage. Hutchinson v. Davis, 58 Ill. App. 358.

INNUENDO. (See also the title LIBEL AND SLANDER.) — The office of an innuendo in pleading is to explain, not to enlarge, and is the same in effect as "that is to say." It is used almost exclusively in practice in actions for defamation.¹

INOFFICIOUS WILL. (See generally the titles UNDUE INFLUENCE; WILLS.) — An inofficious will is a will not in accordance with the testator's natural affection or moral duties.²

INOPORTUNE. — Inopportune means unseasonable in time, or at the wrong time.³

INQUEST. — As to coroners' inquests, see the title CORONERS, vol. 7, p. 598; CORONERS' INQUESTS, 5 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 38. As to inquests in general, see the title INQUESTS AND INQUIRIES, 10 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1134.

INQUEST OF OFFICE. (See also the title ESCHEAT, vol. 11, p. 315, and 8 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1.) — An inquest of office is sometimes simply termed office, as in the phrase "office found." In English practice it is an inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, either virtute officii or by writ sent to him for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels.⁴

Meals Not Actually Obtained. — Under the Illinois statute declaring a person guilty of a misdemeanor who obtains food or accommodation at an inn without paying therefor, such food or accommodation must be actually obtained in order to bring a person within the statute. Thus, where a guest, who had received supper and a night's lodging, pays therefor and departs after breakfast has been served, he cannot be considered as having obtained breakfast within the meaning of the statute, though under the known rules of the hotel a departing guest is required to pay for a meal which is in readiness at the time of his departure. Sundmacher v. Block, 39 Ill. App. 553.

1. In Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 220, it was said: "An innuendo is explanatory of the subject-matter sufficiently expressed before, and it is explanatory of such matter only; for it cannot extend the sense of the words beyond their own meaning, unless something is put upon the record for it to explain." See also Barham's Case, 4 Coke 20; Post Pub. Co. v. Hallam, 16 U. S. App. 651; Beardsley v. Tappan, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 588, 591; Weir v. Hoss, 6 Ala. 881; *Buthrick v. Inofficious Donation. — In Laurange v. Barre, 11 Rob. (La.) 311, it was said that "an inofficious or excessive donation means the disposition which fathers and mothers, or other ascendants, make of their property to the prejudice of their descendants, beyond the proportion reserved to them by law (Civil Code, art. 3522, § 21); that such donations retain all their effect during the life of the donor (Civil Code, art. 1490); and that the action to have them reduced only belongs to the forced heirs of the donor, to be exercised, after his death, against the donee or his heirs. Civil Code, arts. 1489, 1491, 1504. See also Vazeille, Prescription, page 224, nos. 545, 546 et seq."

3. Inopportune. — Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 125 Ill. 73. This case was an action against a railway company to recover for a personal injury charged to have resulted from the carelessness and negligence of its flagman at a street crossing, in signaling the plaintiff to cross its track at a time of danger and peril. The use of the words in an instruction, that if the jury should believe, from the evidence, that the defendant's flagman "improperly and inopportune" signaled the plaintiff's team, etc., instead of using the words "carelessly and negligently," was urged as error. It was held that while the use of the latter words would have been technically more correct, yet the use of the former words was not sufficiently inaccurate to mislead the jury, those words imputing negligence under the circumstances of the case.

4. Inquest of Office. — "As, to inquire whether the king's tenant for life died seized, whereby the reversion accrues to the king; whether A, who held immediately of the crown, died without heir, in which case the lands belong to the king by escheat; whether B be attainted of treason, whereby his estate is forfeited to the crown; whether C, who has purchased land, be an alien, which is another cause of forfeiture. * * * These inquests of office were more frequently in practice during the continuance of the military tenures than at present; and were devised by law as an authentic means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record." Burrill L. Dict., citing 3 Black Com. 258.

'an inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ to them sent for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. This is done by a jury of no determinate number, being either twelve, or less, or more.

* * * These inquests of office were devised by law as an authentic means to give the king his right by solemn matter of record, without which he, in general, can neither take nor part from anything.' 3 Black. Com. 258, 259." Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Mingus, 165 U. S. 413.

1. Inquisition.—An inquisition as known to our law is a finding of facts by a jury. Bouv. L. Dict., cited in Newton v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 15 Hun (N. Y.) 597, affirmed 76 N. Y. 426.

Inquiry—Requisition. (See also REQUISITION.)—The condition of an auction sale provided that it should form no objection to the title that the indenture under which the vendor held was an underlease, and no requisition or inquiry should be made respecting the title of the lessor or his superior landlord, or his right to grant such underlease. In construing this provision, Quain, J., said: "The word inquiry there is not used for the purpose of precluding all inquiry aliunde, but is used as a convertible expression with the word 'requisition,' and does not extend beyond the word 'requisition;' and I find in the seventh condition, where the word inquiry is again used, that it is used in that sense; because it says, 'and all inquiries and evidences, if any, which may be required by the purchaser for the purpose of verifying the abstract, shall be made at his expense.' The word inquiry, in the sixth condition, has not so wide a meaning as that word had in the condition in Hume v. Bentley, 5 De G. & Sm. 520, 21 L. J. Ch. 760, because the words there were, 'the lessor's title will not be shown and shall not be inquired into,' evidently pointing, therefore, to inquiries from all quarters and in all ways; whereas I think, in the present case, the stipulation points to inquiries and requisitions between the vendor and purchaser." Waddell v. Wolfe, L. R. 9 Q. B. 521.

Inquiry.—The Penal Code of New York provided that no act or omission begun after the beginning of the day on which the code took effect should be deemed criminal or punishable, except as prescribed or authorized by the code, but any act or omission begun prior to that day might be inquired of. In construing this provision in People v. Beckwith, 108 N. Y. 67, the court said: "Does the latter clause include the provision of section 181? An 'act' criminal in its nature 'may be inquired of' by various courts upon whom jurisdiction is conferred 'to inquire,' through the intervention of a grand jury, concerning it, or such inquiry may be made in certain cases though an examination before a magistrate, but in either case the inquiry relates to a proceeding before indictment found or trial had; prosecution relates to the warrant, the arrest, the indictment, and other proceedings following the inquiry and before punishment, and the manner of so doing is regulated by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Penal Code, § 8)."

Inquiry of Damages.—In Gridley v. Brigs, 2 How. (Miss.) 831, it was said: "The whole matter resolves itself into this: What is an inquiry of damages? The term is technical, and means the legal ascertainment of damages, and may be in various ways. The section does not speak of a 'writ of inquiry of damages,' but merely of an 'inquiry of damages.' By Rev. Code 120, § 67, a method is expressly pointed out for ascertaining the amount due, where the action is founded on any instrument of writing for a sum certain, without the intervention of a jury. That this process is an inquiry of damages is certain from the fact that on a declaration containing but a single count upon such instrument, the judgment cannot be final until the ascertainment of damages according to this section. The clerk is authorized to make inquiry of damages, not to execute a writ of inquiry, but to ascertain and inquire of damages."

Inquiry and Report.—A statute provided for a reference for inquiry and report. In construing this provision, Esher, M. R., in Wenlock v. River Dee Co., 19 Q. B. D. 158, said: "It does not appear to me that the word inquiry only includes an inquiry which the referee is to make with his own eyes. The word inquiry, in my opinion, signifies an inquiry in which he is to take evidence and hold a judicial inquiry in the usual way in which such inquiries are held. The word inquiry is used because it is not meant to have the same result as a trial." See also ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., title REFERENCES, vol. 17, p. 978.

I. DEFINITIONS — 1. Insanity Generally. — The word "insane" is a general term, and is not confined in its application to persons who are wholly without understanding. It is applicable to every person who is non compos mentis or of unsound or deranged mind.¹

2. Idiocy. — An idiot is one who has been without understanding from his nativity — one who has been in a continuous state of fatuity from his birth.²

3. Lunacy. — A lunatic is a person who has possessed reason, but through disease, grief, or other cause has lost it. The term is especially applicable to

1. Insanity Generally. — Burnham v. Mitchell, 34 Wis. 117.

A Person Who until Nine Years of Age Was a Bright Child, but who afterwards came into such a state of mind as to be denominated, in ordinary parlance, an idiot, is an "insane" person within the meaning of the statutes providing for the care of the insane. Speedling v. Worth County, 68 Iowa 152.

one who has lucid intervals, and may yet, in contemplation of the law, recover his reason.¹

4. Persons Non Compotes Mentis. — The words non compos mentis have, from an early period, been used as a generic term to include all persons mentally deranged, without regard to the cause or duration of their malady.²

5. Delusions and Hallucinations. — Delusions and hallucinations constitute that species of mental unsoundness which is marked by persistent and incorrigible beliefs that things which exist only in the imagination of the patient are real.³

6. Imbecility. — Mental imbecility is a weakness of the mind due to defective development or loss of the faculties.⁴ Whether it will incapacitate the subject for the ordinary duties of life depends upon the seriousness of the infirmity in the particular case.⁵

7. Senile Dementia. — Senile dementia is that form of insanity in the aged, marked by slowness and weakness, which indicates the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of bodily decay.⁶

8. Delirium Tremens. — Delirium tremens, or mania a potu, is a disorder of the brain arising from the inordinate and protracted use of ardent spirits. The delirium is a constant symptom, but the tremor is not always conspicuously present. It is properly a disease of the nervous system, and is one of the legally recognized forms of insanity.⁷

9. Moral Insanity — Irresistible Impulse — Emotional Insanity. — Moral Insanity, or a morbid perversion of the moral feelings, has been the subject of considerable discussion by both laymen and members of the profession; but however the subject may be viewed from a metaphysical standpoint, it may be laid down as a general proposition of law that the mere perversion of the moral feelings, unaccompanied by mental delusion, is of itself insufficient to invalidate a civil act⁸ or to excuse a criminal act.⁹

Irresistible Impulse is not to be confounded with passionate propensity. No matter how hot the passion, or how fierce the frenzy, it is not insanity; and the question comes at last to this — was there a disease of the brain?¹

Emotional Insanity is a derangement of the emotional powers, or inability to control one's impulses.² It is closely allied to irresistible impulse, but lacks the essential element of intellectual insanity. Consequently, while the emotive part of human nature may be the common and perhaps the only source of mental disease, emotional insanity, of itself, cannot be accepted as an excuse from criminal responsibility.³

10. Monomania. — Monomania is insanity in which there is a more or less complete limitation of the perverted mental action to a particular field, as a special delusion or an impulse to do some particular thing, though the other mental functions may show some signs of degeneration.⁴

11. Homicidal Mania. — Much has been written by alienists and metaphysicians on the subject of homicidal mania.⁵ Nevertheless it has failed to obtain a standing in court as an excuse for crime. One who kills another under circumstances which would otherwise amount to murder cannot escape punishment on the ground of insanity, unless it be shown that at the time his reason was dethroned or that he was laboring under an insane delusion which deprived him of his reason in regard to the act charged.⁶

"Transitory Homicidal Mania" is a term invented by ingenious lawyers to afford to the jury a safe bridge upon which to pass from a disagreeable technical duty to the accomplishment of their desire where the accused has killed some one who, according to the consensus of opinion, ought to have been killed.⁷

12. Kleptomania. — Kleptomania is a morbid propensity to steal without regard to the value or utility of the article stolen;⁸ and it is now considered a sufficient defense to a prosecution for the larceny of the articles stolen by a person afflicted with such malady.⁹

13. Pyromania. — Pyromania may be defined as a morbid propensity to incendiarism. The plea has been admitted in some cases where there was strong reason to suspect mental aberration, but in such cases only.¹⁰

6. Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. Rep. 161, did much in the way of clearing the legal atmosphere of fruitless speculation on this subject. In the note to this case, 10 Fed. Rep. 189, the editor expresses the opinion that one of the incidental benefits arising from the trial has been the development of the fact that the theory of moral insanity has no longer any professional medical opinion in its favor. This statement seems to be amply sustained by the editor's quotation from the London Lancet of Dec. 12, 1881, and the opinions of eminent alienists quoted from the North American Review of January, 1882.

9. Looney v. State, 10 Tex. App. 524, 38 Am. Rep. 646. In this case the court reversed the judgment because the trial court did not charge the jury specially on this particular symptom as it relates to the general subject of insanity. See also Harris v. State, 18 Tex. App. 287.

In Com. v. Fritch, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 164, this defense was set up, but it failed because the prosecution succeeded in showing a motive for the crime consistent with the sanity of the defendants.

See also the case of James Gibson, tried before the High Court of Justiciary in Edinburgh, cited in Taylor's Med. Jur. 595, and reported in full in Cormack's Edinburgh Journal, Feb. 1845, p. 141.

Another example is the case of Jonathan Martin, who believed himself to be deputed of God to burn down the cathedral of York, to do away with the heresies practiced there.

14. Dipsomania. — Dipsomania is a periodic recurrence of a violent thirst for intoxicating liquor, a thirst which is not quenched until the patient has drunk continuously for a period of greater or less duration, depending upon the constitution of the individual, when the passion subsides and he remains sober until another attack of the disease comes on.¹ It seems that such a thirst, produced by the habit of drinking, is no excuse, legal or moral, for the consequences resulting from the indulgence of the appetite;² though it has been held that whether there is such a mental disease as dipsomania, whether the defendant had that disease, and whether his act was the product of such disease are all questions of fact for the jury to decide upon the evidence in the case.³

15. Somnambulism. — Alienists have written much of somnambulism, or, as the etymology of the word indicates, the habit of walking about in one's sleep, or at least in a state intermediate between sleep and wakefulness.⁴ Such writings contain accounts of many well-authenticated cases in which acts of great atrocity have been committed while the perpetrator was either asleep or just being aroused from sleep; and this has recently found its way into court as a defense to a prosecution for homicide, on the ground that the accused was, at the time of the killing, incapable of entertaining a criminal intent.⁵

16. Delirium. — Delirium is a disordered state of the mental faculties, more or less temporary, and occurring during illness, especially in febrile conditions.⁶

17. Craziness. — The word "crazy" in its popular sense imports a broken, shattered, or deranged mind, rather than one enfeebled by age or disease.⁷

18. Lucid Intervals. — By "lucid interval" is meant, not merely a cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder,⁸ but a temporary restoration of reason such as to create responsibility for acts done during its continuance.⁹ Still, restoration of the mental faculties to their original condition is not necessary; it is sufficient if there be such restoration that the person is able, beyond doubt, to comprehend and to do the act with such reason, memory, and judgment as to make it a legal act.¹⁰

II. JURISDICTION IN LUNACY. — In England the custody of idiots and lunatics and the management of their property have from a very early period been vested in the crown,¹¹ but this control was exercised by delegated authority and not by the sovereign in person. While the lord chancellor, except during the existence of the Court of Wards,¹² has generally exercised this jurisdiction, it should be observed that he has not done so by virtue of his judicial office, but as the direct delegate and representative of the crown, deriving his authority from the royal warrant under the sign manual of the sovereign delivered to him upon his coming into office, it being the theory of the law that the royal authority was thus delegated once for all to prevent repeated applications to the sovereign in person.¹

It has been said that the original ground for the custody of idiots and lunatics is more a matter of curiosity than of use, and that it certainly existed before the statute De Prerogativa Regis. Ex p. Grimstone, Amb. 706. See also Oxenden v. Compton, 2 Ves. Jr. 71; Matter of Fitzgerald, 2 Sch. & Lef. 435; Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridg. P. C. 213.

In the United States there has been considerable discussion as to whether those courts which have general equity jurisdiction possess by virtue thereof inherent jurisdiction in lunacy. Many cases hold that in the absence of legislation on the subject courts of general equity jurisdiction, representing the state in its character of parens patriæ, may rightfully exercise the same powers and control over the persons and property of lunatics and idiots as were exercised in England by the lord chancellor under the authority of the royal warrant,² though there are decisions to the contrary.³

The Discussion Is, However, of Little Practical Importance at the present time, inasmuch as the question of jurisdiction and the procedure in lunacy are now regulated by statute, both in England⁴ and the United States. In a number of the states the probate courts have jurisdiction,⁵ in others the county courts,⁶ in still others the courts of record having general original jurisdiction,⁷ while in a few states this jurisdiction still remains with the court of chancery.⁸

sue out a commission or make himself a party to the proceedings.¹

Municipal Authorities. — In some jurisdictions the application may be made by the selectmen of the town or overseers of the poor,² and it has been held that where the alleged lunatic is wasting his property and is liable to become a charge upon the town, the application may be made by any inhabitant of the town, and need not be signed by the overseers of the poor, though in such case the person signing the petition is liable for costs in case of an appeal.³

Where Confinement the Object. — Where the object of the proceedings is to confine the lunatic in an asylum, it is not an unusual provision that the application may be made by any person having knowledge of the lunacy.⁴

3. Issuance of Commission Matter of Discretion. — The issuance of a commission is a matter within the sound discretion of the court in each particular case,⁵ the controlling consideration being the welfare of the lunatic. Where the propriety of issuing the commission is doubtful, the chancellor may instruct physicians to make private examinations of the party for the enlightenment of the court.⁶ In several early English cases, a commission was refused because the person was not shown to be insane, within the technical meaning of that term, although of weak understanding and imbecile mind.⁷ But according to more recent cases it is not necessary upon a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo to establish idiocy or lunacy.⁸ It is sufficient, if, as said by Lord Eldon, "it is made out that the party is unable to act with any proper and provident management; liable to be robbed by any one; under that imbecility of mind, not strictly insanity, but as to the mischief calling for as much protection as actual insanity."⁹

4. Notice to and Attendance of Lunatic — Notice to Alleged Lunatic — General Rule. — Where, as in England, a traverse of the inquisition is deemed a matter of right,¹⁰ it seems that a failure to serve notice on the alleged lunatic does not invalidate the proceedings.¹¹ But in the United States it is generally held that a person against whom a commission of lunacy is issued is entitled to reasonable notice of the time and place of the inquisition, and has the right to be present and contest the proceedings.¹² In some cases it has been held that

7. Notice to Relatives. — Matter of Nesbitt, 2 Phil. 245.

In In re Hinchman, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 184, 7 Pa. L. J. 268, it was held that such relatives and friends as counsel a finding against the alleged lunatic are excluded from the list of persons competent to receive notice of the execution of the commission.

In Matter of Rogers, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 9 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 141, it was held that failure to give notice of an application for a commission to one of the heirs of the lunatic is at most only an irregularity, as he has no absolute right to notice. See also In re Scarlett, L. R. 8 Ch. 739; Matter of Brown, 1 Macn. & G. 201, In re Clements, 2 Coop. 166.

In Morton v. Sims, 64 Ga. 298, it was held that if the nearest adult relatives of the alleged imbecile are themselves the petitioners, the ten days' notice provided for in the Georgia Code should be given to three of the next nearest, or if there be no adult relatives within the state except the petitioners, then the ordinary should either require ten days' notice to the alleged imbecile himself, or else designate by order a guardian ad litem to receive the notice for him.

Under the Michigan statute (How. Annot. Stat. 1882, § 6,314; Comp. Laws 1897, § 8,709), it was held that where all the next of kin residing in the state were notified, the finding of lunacy is not void because nonresident heirs were not notified. Munger v. Kaiaamazoo County, 86 Mich. 363.

The Jurisdiction of the Court does not depend on notice being given to all of the next of kin of the alleged lunatic. In re Cook, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 6 N. Y. Supp. 720; Matter of Demelt, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 480.

The Brother of an Alleged Incompetent Person, who is also the mortgagee in a mortgage executed for his use and benefit, is entitled to notice of proceedings looking towards the appointment of a guardian for such brother, instituted on the petition of his wife. Partello v. Holton, 79 Mich. 373.

Where Application Made by Husband or Wife. — Notice of an application for the appointment of a committee need not be given to a relative of the alleged incompetent person where the application is made by the husband or wife of such person. Matter of Parke, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 662. See also Matter of Beach, 23 N. Y. App. Div. 413.

8. The interests of the heirs and next of kin must, in the trial of an inquisition, be wholly secondary to the interests of the lunatic, with respect to both his person and his estate.

Lunatic's Right to Be Present. — The person whose sanity is undergoing investigation has a right to be present at the execution of the commission, and it is fatal to the proceedings if this right is denied;¹ and where the inquisition assumes the form of a trial before the judge and a jury, it is frequently provided by statute that the supposed lunatic shall, if practicable, be produced in open court, that he may not be deprived of his liberty and the control of his property without an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf.²

When Notice or Presence of Lunatic May Be Dispensed With. — If it is made to appear that the alleged lunatic is a dangerous madman or cannot be controlled, notice may be dispensed with, and the proceedings may be had in his absence.³ And in some instances it has been held that if he cannot be produced in court without injury to his health, the court may dispense with his personal appearance.⁴

5. Powers and Duties of Commissioners — The Jurors — Improper Interference by Commissioners. — In a New York case it was held to be the duty of the sheriff to select and summon the jurors, and that for the commissioners to dictate to him what jurors should be summoned was an irregularity for which the proceedings should be set aside.⁵ And in New Jersey it was considered a fatal irregularity for the commissioners to remain in the jury room in the absence of the alleged lunatic and his counsel, and to charge the jurors and inform them of the issue, and to answer questions and make suggestions as to the mode of ascertaining their sentiments on that subject in the use of the ballot.⁶

Improper Interference by Sheriff. — When the sheriff improperly interferes with the deliberations of the jury, as where he converses with them on the matter under consideration, the inquisition will be set aside.⁷

Compelling Attendance of Witnesses. — In Pennsylvania it is held that the com-

An inquisition of lunacy which appeared to have been taken by the coroner and twelve freeholders, and returned to the County Court, and by it confirmed, and from which it did not appear that the lunatic was present, was offered in evidence to support the plea of non compos mentis. It was held that since the writing had been received by the County Court as an inquest, and a guardian had been appointed under it, it was too late to question it as an inquest. Arrington v. Short, 3 Hawks (10 N. Car.) 71.

2. See the various statutes, and also the notes following.

In Montana the statute provides that the alleged lunatic shall be brought before the judge and a jury of three, one of whom shall be a licensed practicing physician, for personal examination. State v. Third Judicial Dist. Ct., 17 Mont. 411; Territory v. Gallatin County, 6 Mont. 297.

Nonresidence or Temporary Absence. — It is not absolutely necessary that the alleged lunatic should be before the jury. A commission may issue where he is a nonresident or temporarily absent from the state, and where it is impossible for the jury to see him. Matter of Child, 16 N. J. Eq. 498.

The alleged lunatic should be present at the place of trial, if consistent with his health and safety. Craft v. Simon, 118 Ala. 625. But if this would be attended with great inconvenience and injury to the afflicted person, his actual presence may be dispensed with. Campbell's Case, 2 Bland (Md.) 209, 20 Am. Dec. 360.

False Representation. — A judgment that a person is of unsound mind and incapable of managing his estate will be set aside as fraudulent where it is shown that such judgment was procured by falsely representing that the person alleged to be insane was confined in a hospital, and could not be produced in court without injury to his health. Asbury v. Frisz, 148 Ind. 513.

5. Commissioners Dictating to Sheriff as to Jurors. — In Matter of Wager, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 11, the chancellor decided that the commissioners were only authorized to pass upon the validity of challenges to the jurors selected by the sheriff. For the irregularity referred to in the text the issuance of a new commission was directed.

missioners have full power to issue subpoenas for witnesses and to compel attendance, and their refusal to do so on the application of the alleged lunatic is fatal to the proceedings.¹

Decision of Questions of Law. — The commissioners are also authorized to decide on the validity of challenges to the jurors selected,² and after the testimony is closed they should submit the question to the jury in the form of a charge, stating the law applicable to the case and recapitulating the facts if necessary, but without arguments of counsel on either side; and in relation to every legal question arising in the execution of the commission, a majority of the commissioners must decide.³ They are, however, subject to the direction of the court as to the manner in which they shall proceed.⁴

Trial Before Court. — In some jurisdictions no commissioners are appointed. The trial of the inquisition is had before the judge of the court having jurisdiction of the matter, by a jury summoned and sworn for that purpose.⁵

Number of Jurors. — The statutes ordinarily specify the number of which the jury is to consist. As a rule the jury must be not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three in number.⁶

Bias of Juror. — A juror should not sit who confesses that he has formed an opinion, and that it would require "some little evidence to overcome it."⁷ And the party is entitled to a new trial if it appears that any such bias or opinion previously formed operated against him.⁸

6. Personal Examination of Lunatic — Exclusion of Spectators. — The commissioners and jury have a right to make a personal examination of the alleged lunatic, that they may be assisted by their own observations of his appearance and conduct;⁹ and if they think proper, they may require those having him in custody to produce him before them, and to this end may have the assistance of the court in enforcing their requirement.¹⁰ Though such personal examination is usually made, and should be made in every case of doubt, when practicable,¹¹ it is nevertheless within the discretion of the commissioners whether

In Matter of Dey, 9 N. J. Eq. 181, twenty-three jurors, and in Matter of Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 186, twenty-one jurors, were sworn.

In De Hart v. Condit, 51 N. J. Eq. 613, 40 Am. St. Rep. 545, it was said that in practice any number not less than twelve nor more than twenty-three has been considered adequate.

10. Report Made by Greater Number than Required. — In Field v. Lucas, 21 Ga. 447, 68 Am. Dec. 465, it was held that it was not fatal to the proceeding that the report was made by thirteen men instead of twelve.

11. A Jury of Less than Twelve is provided for in some states. Thus in Montana the jury consists of three citizens of the county, one of whom must be a licensed practicing physician. Territory v. Gallatin, 6 Mont. 297; State v. Third Judicial Dist. Ct., 17 Mont. 411.

they will make it or omit it,¹ and where it is made it is not required that the jurors attend as a body or that they all see and examine the lunatic.²

Exclusion of Spectators. — At a personal examination of an alleged lunatic by the commissioners and jurors, all other persons, including counsel, may be excluded in order that the commissioners and jurors may have an opportunity without interruption to make their own observations.³

IV. COSTS AND DISBURSEMENTS — 1. In General. — In the absence of express statutory provision to the contrary, the allowance of costs in lunacy proceedings is discretionary with the court having jurisdiction of the proceedings, and depends upon the character of the application and the conduct of the party — that is, upon the fairness of intention and motives, and the reasonableness of the proceedings.⁴

2. Imposed upon Prosecutor. — Costs are not, as a matter of course, granted against a person who institutes the proceedings and fails in them. In such circumstances he should not be condemned in costs if the prosecution was made from proper motives and in good faith.⁵

Want of Probable Cause. — But if the proceedings were instituted in bad faith, or if it appears by the certificate of the commissioners, or otherwise, that there was not probable cause for the application, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, will usually impose the costs of the proceeding upon the petitioner.⁶

3. Imposed upon Lunatic's Estate. — Where, as the result of the inquisition, the supposed lunatic is found to be insane, the costs of the proceeding are ordinarily taxed against his estate.⁷

Attorney's Fees for Opposing Commission. — It is important that every reasonable

Where the Case is a Proper One for Inquiry, the petitioner should not be ordered to pay the costs of the inquisition, though the supposed lunatic was found to be of sound mind. In re E. S—, 4 Ch. D. 301.

Extra Allowances. — In Matter of McAdams, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 292, the court said: "Assuming the proceedings de lunatico inquirendo to be special proceedings, within the meaning of chapter 270, Laws of 1854, the court had no power to grant extra allowances to the alleged lunatic, upon inquisition being found in her favor."

Setting Aside Finding of Lunacy for Insufficiency of Evidence. — The Court of Common Pleas has no power to set aside an inquisition finding the fact of lunacy in proceedings de lunatico inquirendo upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding, and where this is done it is also error to impose the costs of the proceedings upon the petitioner. In re Weaver, 116 Pa. St. 225.

6. Prosecution Without Probable Cause. — Matter of White, 17 N. J. Eq. 274; Ex p. Birth, 1 Kulp (Pa.) 101.

In Indiana, upon the Dismissal of Proceedings to obtain a judicial declaration that a person is of unsound mind and for the appointment of a guardian of such person, the court may award costs against the person who instituted the inquiry. Ruhlman v. Ruhlman, 110 Ind. 314. See also Galbreath v. Black, 80 Ind. 300.

The Commissioners Are Entitled to Compensation out of the lunatic's estate. Matter of Lofthouse, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 139; Sargent's Case, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 140.

Where the wife of a lunatic petitioned for the removal of the committee upon the ground of fraud and mismanagement in the execution of his trust, and upon the hearing it appeared that the committee had faithfully discharged his duty, and no probable cause for the application was shown, costs out of the estate were denied to the wife, but the costs of the committee were allowed. Matter of Lytle, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 251.

opportunity to defend himself in the proceeding instituted to have him adjudged insane should be afforded to the alleged lunatic. If he is ultimately found to be insane, the court has the power to award such sum as seems reasonable and right under the circumstances, payable out of his property, to the persons who render service in defending him. In this way it is possible to prevent fraud and mistake.¹

So, Also, the Disbursements of the Petitioner for costs and counsel fees are a proper charge against the estate of one who has been found a lunatic.²

4. Where Inquisition Fails or Is Set Aside. — In England, until the powers of the chancellor were enlarged by statute,³ in proceedings upon a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo, where the alleged lunatic was found to be of sound mind, or where the commission was superseded before a committee was appointed, or where the inquisition was successfully traversed, costs and expenses could not be allowed to the prosecutor, because, as the court had not obtained control of the lunatic's property, there was no fund out of which their payment could be directed.⁴ If, however, the lunatic had a fund already in court, it was within the discretion of the chancellor to order that the costs of the proceedings in lunacy be paid out of that fund, where such proceedings were evidently for the benefit and protection of the lunatic.⁵

In the United States no uniform rule exists. In one jurisdiction at least the old English rule is in vogue,⁶ and in others the courts appear to have ample discretion in the matter; but generally the rules for the imposition of costs in such proceedings are to be found in the statutes.⁷

1. Counsel Fees. — Matter of Hardy, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 166; Carter v. Beckwith, 128 N. Y. 319.

The court may in its discretion allow costs for opposing the commission although unsuccessful, where the fact of the lunacy is so much in doubt that the chancellor would have sanctioned and directed such opposition if the application had been made to him in the first instance. Matter of Conklin, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 450.

2. Matter of Lofthouse, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 139. See also Matter of Root, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 625.

Counsel to Committee. — A proper compensation of counsel representing the petitioner and the lunatic may be allowed, but no allowance for counsel to the committee of the person will be made in advance; the necessity for such allowance must be passed on after the occasion arises. In re Heft, 8 Pa. Dist. 351.

Costs Assessed Against Guardian. — Under the Indiana Act of May 29, 1852, § 5 (Horner's Stat. Ind. 1896, § 2548), the guardian of a lunatic may be required to pay an attorney employed by the lunatic's children for services in prosecuting the proceeding in which the party was adjudged insane and the guardian was appointed. Brownlee v. Switzer, 49 Ind. 221; State v. Newlin, 69 Ind. 108.

3. When Party Found Sane. — Lunacy Regulation Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict., c. 86, § 11. By this act the matter of costs is placed entirely within the discretion of the lord chancellor.

Under this statute, when the inquiry as to lunacy was based on the report of the lunacy commissioners, and the jury found in favor of sanity, it is proper for the court to order the payment of the costs in both proceedings out of the lunatic's estate. In re C., L. R. 10 Ch. 75. See also In re F., 33 L. J. Ch. 333. Compare In re E. S., 4 Ch. D. 301, where, under the circumstances, the court refused to award costs either for or against the petitioner. The party was found sound of mind, but the case was one calling for inquiry.

6. New Jersey. — Matter of Farrell, 51 N. J. Eq. 353, holding further that the fees of jurors and commissioners cannot be allowed as a charge upon the estate of an alleged lunatic if he is found to be of sound mind.

7. Under the Pennsylvania Statute the Court of Common Pleas has full power to decree that either party shall pay all the costs, or that the several parties interested shall pay the costs in such proportion as the justice of the case may require. Hassenplug's Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 527; In re Weaver, 116 Pa. St. 225; Clark's Case, 22 Pa. St. 466.

Where the Return Was Defective and would not support the commission, but found the alleged lunatic to be feeble-minded and unfit to manage her affairs, it was held to be the exercise of a proper discretion to divide the costs between the petitioner and the lunatic. Com. v. Reeves, 140 Pa. St. 258. See also In re Graybill, 2 York (Pa.) 109.

Certificate of Probable Cause. — It has been held that, even after a finding that the party was not a lunatic, the court would order him to pay the costs of the inquisition unless the commissioner certified that there was not probable cause for the application. In re Hogg, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 509.

Payment Before Proceedings Concluded — Re-
Volume XVI.

Costs upon Traverse. — Where the inquisition is sustained upon the trial of a traverse it is proper to charge the costs to the traverser.¹

5. By What Court Allowed. — The costs should be taxed and allowed in the court having jurisdiction of the proceedings in lunacy. If this is not done while the lunatic is living, a court of probate cannot allow the bill of costs as a valid claim against his estate after his death.²

Actions Against Committee. — The committee of a lunatic ought not to be subject to action for any of the expenses of the process by which the lunatic and his estate are put into the custody of the law. All these expenses ought to be carefully supervised by the court; and, considering the helpless condition of the lunatic, none ought to be allowed except such as are manifestly just and moderate. If the committee is liable to action, he may be sued anywhere, and thus put to very unjust inconvenience and expense, under the forms of law. The court that has the final settlement of the committee's account ought to have the control of the committee's expenditures.³

Extent of Court's Authority. — But the court having jurisdiction of the lunacy proceedings has no authority to allow a claim against the estate of the lunatic which is not a part of the expense incurred in such proceedings. All claims which are not a part of such expense stand on the footing of ordinary debts.⁴

V. APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN — 1. Character of Trust — Guardianship of Infants Distinguished — Mere Curator. — The powers which inhere in the office of committee, under both the English and the American jurisprudence, are confined within very narrow limits. In the former the committee is a mere bailiff or receiver appointed by the chancellor for the crown;⁵ and in the latter he is usually a mere curator, without title to the property of the lunatic, and as such possesses only the power to preserve, repair, and improve such property, unless his authority is enlarged by statute.⁶

Guardians for Infants and for Insane Distinguished. — To some extent, the respective duties of guardians for minors and for insane persons are similar; but the modes of ascertaining the necessity of guardianship in the two cases are quite dissimilar.⁷ The office of a guardian appointed because of infancy ceases imbursement. — Or the court may order the alleged lunatic to pay costs before the proceeding is determined; but in such case the court may order reimbursement on the determination of the case. Clark's Case, 22 Pa. St. 466.

Under the Missouri Statute a judgment for costs against an alleged lunatic who was not found to be such is unauthorized, and the execution and all proceedings thereunder are void. State v. Duestrow, 70 Mo. App. 311.

In Illinois such costs are purely a matter of statutory regulation, and the courts have no power to adjudge them as against any one on mere equitable or moral grounds. Union County v. Axley, 53 Ill. App. 670.

Character as Debt. — Until the costs of such proceedings are adjusted and fixed by the court, they are not debts against the estate in such a sense that they can be collected in the ordinary manner in which debts of a decedent may be collected. Matter of Lofthouse, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 139.

when minority ceases,¹ and he cannot after that event continue under such appointment by reason of the insanity of the ward.²

2. Prior Adjudication of Insanity Requisite. — A committee cannot be appointed until after the lunatic has been adjudged insane.³

Notice to Lunatic. — And it has been held that even then the court has no power to appoint a committee without notice to the lunatic,⁴ though in some cases it seems to be conceded that where the status of lunacy is once fixed by a proper inquisition the court has the power to appoint a committee or guardian without further notice.⁵

Collateral Attack. — The action of the court in appointing a guardian is not, however, open to collateral attack where the record discloses no want of jurisdiction.⁶

3. Same Person as Committee of Person and Estate. — Though it is usual to appoint the same party committee of the person and the estate, yet not unfrequently the practice is different, and from peculiar circumstances it is sometimes eminently proper to intrust the person of the lunatic to one committee and his estate to another.⁷

4. On Whose Nomination Appointment to Be Made. — Though the committee is usually appointed on the nomination of the person who sues out the commission of lunacy, yet a caveat may be entered against the appointment, and when this is done the recommendations of the parties interested will be considered, and proof may be taken to aid the court in making the selection.⁸

1. The force of the order of appointment may be extended when necessary for the purpose of the settlement of the trust. See generally the title GUARDIAN AND WARD, vol. 15, pp. 45 et seq., 73.

A guardian for the estate of a lunatic may be appointed without appointing a guardian of the person. Heckman v. Adams, 50 Ohio St. 305. See also Easley v. Bone, 39 Mo. App. 388.

But under the Michigan statute it is held that an order appointing a guardian must include both the person and the estate of the lunatic. Matter of Bassett, 68 Mich. 348.

8. Who May Nominate. — Matter of Colvin, 3 Md. Ch. 278.

Course Where Next of Kin Have Not Assented to or United in Petition. — In Matter of Lamoree, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 277, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 122, the court said: "If the next of kin unite in a petition, and name a proper person as committee, or give their consent in writing to the appointment of a particular person, it is usual to select such person. But if the next of kin have not assented, or united in the petition, there should be an order of reference, and then the next of kin are entitled to notice of the proceedings upon the reference, and to propose themselves as the committee."

If the Person Recommended Is Embarrassed by Pecuniary Difficulties, and there is any reasonable ground for apprehending that he would be likely to employ in his own affairs the money which may come to his hands as committee, this will operate with powerful force

5. Consideration Given to Lunatic's Wishes. — The court, in selecting a committee of the person, will, as far as practicable under the circumstances, follow the wishes of the lunatic himself.¹

6. Who May Be Appointed — a. HEIR AT LAW — NEXT OF KIN — RELATIVES GENERALLY — Early Rule Excluding Heir. — In the early English cases it was held that the heir of a lunatic could not have the custody of his person, though he might be appointed committee of his estate.²

Next of Kin. — It was said to be no objection, however, that the committee of the lunatic's person was his next of kin and would come in for a share by the statute of distributions.³

Modern Rule. — This rule was, however, long ago abandoned in England,⁴ and the relatives and next of kin are now preferred in the appointment of a committee, unless there is some specific objection to their appointment.⁵ As the reason which lay at the foundation of the rule has never existed in the United States, the rule itself has found no support in the courts of the latter country.⁶

No Absolute Preference of Relatives. — While there is no rule of law excluding the heirs or next of kin,⁷ on the other hand there is no rule of absolute preference of relatives;⁸ the court selecting the committee with a view to the best interests of the lunatic, keeping in view always the possibility of his recovery.⁹

b. HUSBAND. — The husband, if a suitable person, should be intrusted with the guardianship of his insane wife, in preference to a third person;¹⁰ but he against his appointment. Matter of Colvin, 3 Md. Ch. 278.

3. Next of Kin. — Neal's Case, 2 P. Wms. 544; Ex p. Ludlow, 2 P. Wms. 635.

The Reason Assigned for This Distinction was that the heir at law would have an interest in the death of the lunatic, whereas the next of kin, because of the probability of increase of the personalty by the continuance of the lunatic's life, would be interested in the preservation thereof. See the cases just cited.

This Distinction Is Not Satisfactory; for immediate gain would be a stronger temptation than the hope of future advantage to those upon whom suspicion, which was the foundation of the rule, could attach. See Ex p. Cockayne, 7 Ves. Jr. 591, note.

The Rule Had Relation in Its Origin to Socage Tenure, and the principle of law upon which it rested was that no one who had a temptation to put the ward out of the way could have the custody of his person. The next of blood to whom the inheritance could not descend was therefore entitled to the guardianship in socage. Ex p. Richards, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 376. Where the Father of a Lunatic Is Living and Has the Custody of the Lunatic's Estate, he should be the committee, on giving bond, if he is willing to accept. Coleman v. Lunatic Asylum, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 239.

In Georgia, Among Collateral Relatives applying for the guardianship, the nearest of kin by blood, if otherwise unobjectionable, is preferred, males being preferred to females. The ordinary, however, in every case may exercise his discretion according to the circumstances, and if necessary may grant the guardianship to a stranger in blood. Armor v. Moore, 104 Ga. 579; Johnson v. Kelly, 44 Ga. 485.

has no absolute right to the trust, and if his friendliness to her is doubtful, and his motives are those of self-interest, he should not be appointed.¹

c. WHEN WOMAN SHOULD BE APPOINTED. — If the lunatic is an unmarried female, it is proper for obvious reasons that the committee of her person should be a woman;² and so in other cases it has been sometimes held that the comfort of the unfortunate individual would be best promoted by having his person placed under the care of a woman committee, as by appointing the wife to be the committee of her insane husband.³

d. RESIDENCE OF COMMITTEE. — As has heretofore been stated, the comfort and well-being of the lunatic are the primary considerations. Accordingly, one who is so situated as to admit of his frequently visiting the lunatic and inspecting the management of his concerns should be preferred as committee if in other respects suitable.⁴ And as the committee should at all times be under the supervision and control of the court, no one who is a nonresident of the jurisdiction should be appointed to that office.⁵

e. CORPORATIONS. — Under statutory authority a corporation may be appointed guardian of the estate of a lunatic; and to such appointment, under a well-guarded statute, there can be no objection either on constitutional grounds or on considerations of public policy.⁶

f. OFFICERS OF COURT. — It has been held that a committee of the person and estate of a lunatic may be appointed without liability to account for profits, upon condition that he will maintain the lunatic and make and return an inventory of his property.⁷ In England, however, a committee cannot be appointed under such conditions, but the chancellor may make what allowance he pleases for the maintenance of the lunatic,⁸ and, as the committee of the lunatic's estate is in all cases required to account for profits, an officer of the court who may be called on to pass the accounts cannot be appointed as such committee.⁹

Distant Residence as Ground for Discharge. — The circumstance that the committee of a lunatic's estate resides at a distance from the property is not a ground per se for discharging him, although it may raise a case for inquiry as to the propriety of his discharge. Matter of Brown, 1 Macn. & G. 201.

visiting the lunatic ought to be discontinued on his going to live out of the jurisdiction. Ex p. Ord, Jac. 94.

6. Corporation as Committee. — Minnesota L. & T. Co. v. Beebe, 40 Minn. 7.

Power Presumed from General Grant to "Execute Trusts of Every Description." — In Equitable Trust Co. v. Garis, 190 Pa. St. 544, it was said by Mr. Justice Mitchell: "In the absence of specific restriction in its charter, which nowhere appears, the Equitable Trust Company, by virtue of its general powers under the Act of May 9, 1889, P. L. 159, to 'execute trusts of every description,' must be presumed to have corporate capacity to act as committee of the lunatic." 9. Court Officer as Committee. — Ex p. Fletcher, 6 Ves. Jr. 427. See also In re Hussey, 1 Molloy 226. In the case first cited Lord Eldon said: "It is a satisfaction that it has occurred to me to say, I cannot appoint a master to be a committee, in the instance of a gentleman than whom there is no man I would rather trust with the management of my own property."

In Ex p. Pincke, 2 Meriv. 452, upon the petition of the committee of the person of a lunatic, the court refused to appoint the solicitor to the commission as receiver of the

g. STRANGERS. — It has been said that, "considering the close and intimate relations which the committee must maintain with the family and relatives of the lunatic, * * * a rule of practice or of positive legislation which would justify the appointment of a stranger to exercise the trust of committee without the assent and against the will of his family or other relatives, and without any sufficient or adequate cause, would be oppressive and intolerable."¹

7. Appointment of Receiver. — If, before the return of the commission, it is made to appear that the estate of the lunatic is suffering from neglect or reckless management, the court may appoint a receiver ad interim to act until a committee of the estate can be regularly appointed.² So in England, where the committee of a lunatic's estate was required to serve without compensation, it was customary, where no one could be found who would act gratuitously, to appoint a receiver with a salary, who performed the same functions as a committee of the estate would have performed.³

8. Whether Security Required. — As a rule the committee ought to be required to give security for the faithful performance of his duties;⁴ but in the absence of a positive statutory requirement, it is within the discretion of the court to appoint a committee without requiring security where the estate of the lunatic is small and no one who is willing to give security can be found to act as committee.⁵ In England the bond is taken to the use of the crown, and the crown is entitled to treat it as a matter of record and have a scire facias issued thereon for a breach of its conditions.⁶ After the recovery of the lunatic and a supersedeas of the commission, the security given by the committee will be discharged, if a fair and satisfactory account is given.⁷

9. For Nonresident Lunatics. — There is no doubt that a commission of lunacy may issue against a person resident abroad if he owns property in the jurisdiction.⁸ But the guardian of an insane person appointed in a foreign juris-lunatic's estate, saying that the court was very jealous of appointing to be a receiver any person whose duty it was to call the receiver to an account.

diction is merely the guardian of his person and of his estate within that jurisdiction. His appointment has no extraterritorial force and gives to him no power over the lunatic's property in other jurisdictions.¹

VI. MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE — GUARDIAN'S RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES

— 1. In General — As has been before stated,² the power which inheres in the committee of a lunatic, except as his authority has been enlarged by statute, is confined within very narrow bounds. Under the English jurisprudence he was the mere bailiff or curator of the lunatic's property, appointed by the chancellor for the crown, for the purpose of preserving the estate of the ward.³ And in the United States, where proceedings in lunacy are had in courts of general equity jurisdiction, the committee or guardian is considered a mere curator of the court, appointed to manage and preserve the lunatic's estate, but without title to his property, real or personal.⁴ In some of the states where such proceedings are had in courts of probate jurisdiction, the guardian of a lunatic is clothed with the same powers and required to perform the same duties as the guardian of an infant, so far as these are applicable.⁵

2. Control of Court. — In the discharge of his duties, the committee acts

But the Petition Must Show that the alleged lunatic is the owner of property within the jurisdiction. Matter of Fowler, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 305.

A Person Found a Lunatic by a Competent Jurisdiction Abroad may be considered a lunatic in the local forum. Ex p. Gillam, 2 Ves. Jr. 587; Ex p. Lewis, 1 Ves. 298; Burke v. Wheaton, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 341. See also Matter of Perkins, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 124; Matter of Neally, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 402.

Alleged Lunatic Without Property and Incarcerated under Sentence of Death. — A commission of lunacy will not be issued where the alleged lunatic has no property and is in prison under sentence of death. Baughn v. Wiley, 98 Ga. 364; In re Clifford, 57 N. J. Eq. 14.

1. Appointment Has No Extraterritorial Force. — Rogers v. McLean, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 304; Matter of Neally, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 402; Matter of Petit, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 174; Weller v. Suggett, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 249. See also Matter of Houstoun, 1 Russ. 312.

The Jurisdiction in Lunacy Is Strictly Territorial, and a court of equity in North Carolina can neither charge the lunatic's land in another state nor its proceeds in the hands of his heir in the former state for his support. Allison v. Campbell, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (21 N. Car.) 152.

Under the Act 1 Wm. IV., c. 65, § 34, the lord chancellor has no jurisdiction to deal with the property of one declared a lunatic in a foreign jurisdiction except in conformity with the laws of the country where the lunacy has been declared. Newton v. Manning, 1 Macn. & G. 362. See also Matter of Graydon, 1 Macn. & G. 655.

Conveyance of Lands. — An inquisition in a foreign jurisdiction is not sufficient to warrant the conveyance of a lunatic's land. There must be an inquisition and a finding in the jurisdiction where the land is situated. Matter of Chandois, 1 Sch. & Lef. 301; Matter of Perkins, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 124; Allison v. Campbell, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (21 N. Car.) 152.

Personalty. — In Matter of Neally, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 402, the court refused to recognize a committee appointed in proceedings had in the state of Iowa, where both the committee and the lunatic resided, on an application by the committee for moneys to which the lunatic had become entitled under the will of his father, who died in the state of New York, where also the administrator was appointed and resided.

More Authority Without Interest. — The grant of the custody of a lunatic's estate is a mere authority without an interest, and does not survive. Ex p. Lyne, Cas. t. Talb. 143.

Statement of Committee's Duties. — Lord Truro considered it to be "the duty of the committee to attend to the management of that [the lunatic's] estate and to keep the court informed of all that materially relates to it, and not to allow it to be administered without taking care that the court is fully apprised of what are the charges affecting it." Matter of Skingley, 3 Macn. & G. 230.

Authority to Committee to Act under Advice of Master. — The court would not, except in a very special case supported by affidavits, make a general order authorizing the committee of a lunatic's estate to act under the opinion and advice of the master in the management of the estate. Matter of Cooper, 1 Myl. & C. 33.

under the control and direction of the court which appointed him; ¹ and where his duty is a matter of doubt, it is his right to ask and receive the aid and direction of the court in the execution of his trust. ² So also where his power to act clearly exists, but is discretionary, he may ask the court for instructions as to the wisdom of exercising it in a particular manner. ³ If any part of the estate of a lunatic is liable to forfeiture or is held upon condition, it is the duty of his committee, if possible, to protect it from the forfeiture, to satisfy the condition, and when necessary to apply to the chancellor or court for directions. ⁴ The committee of an insane widow has no authority without the sanction of the court to elect for her whether she will take under the will of her deceased husband or against it; ⁵ but the court which appointed a committee of her estate has the power and right to make such election for her or to direct her committee to make it, under the instructions of the court. ⁶

3. Employment of Agents. — If the interest of the estate requires the employment of an agent or clerk, the court, upon the application of the committee, will authorize the employment, and the payment of a reasonable compensation for the services out of the income of the estate. ⁷

4. Expenditures for Lunatic — a. HIS COMFORT FIRST CONSIDERATION. — The lunatic should have every comfort of which his situation and fortune will admit, without any regard to the interests of those who may inherit his estate at his death. ⁸ It is no part of the committee's duty to diminish the reasonable comforts of his ward or to prevent him from enjoying such luxuries or indulging such tastes as would be allowable and proper in the case of a man similarly situated in other respects, but in the full possession of his faculties. ⁹ Where the estate of the lunatic is ample to maintain him and his household in the manner he had chosen for himself before his lunacy, and such maintenance is best adapted for his comfort and ease after his lunacy, the court should authorize the committee to expend a sufficient amount of his estate for that purpose. ¹⁰

b. WHERE EXPENDITURES EXCEED INCOME. — The annual allowances for the maintenance of the lunatic may exceed the income of his estate. ¹¹ But

11. Annual Allowances for Maintenance. — In re Persse, 3 Molloy 94; Ex p. Stenard, 18 Ves. Jr. 285; Brown's Estate, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 134.

The Estate of a Lunatic Being Exhausted, his committee may demand and enforce payment as the guardian of a lunatic cannot sell the land of his ward without an order of the court, it follows that he cannot, without the permission of the court, exceed the annual income of the estate in such expenditures.¹ Consequently, when a guardian finds that the income of the ward's estate is not sufficient for his maintenance, it is his duty to submit the whole matter to the consideration of the court, and to act under its directions; if he proceeds otherwise, he acts upon his own responsibility and at his peril.²

c. PROPERTY WITHIN JURISDICTION — PRIMARY FUND. — Where a lunatic has property in the hands of his committee appointed in the jurisdiction of his residence, that property is the primary fund for his support, and should be first applied for that purpose by the committee who has the control of his person, before resorting to his property in another jurisdiction.³ But the committee of the estate of a lunatic who resides in a foreign jurisdiction may be authorized to make such further provision for his support as he may think necessary or proper, when he is satisfied that the estate of the lunatic in the hands of his committee in the jurisdiction of his residence has been exhausted.⁴

d. TRAVELING EXPENSES. — If the ward's health requires it and his estate can bear the expense, he may be permitted to travel, even beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁵

e. WARD'S CHARITABLE ENTERPRISES. — The committee may be authorized by the court to place at the lunatic's disposal, so long as he is competent to judge of the claims of applicants, small sums of money for purposes of charity; and the committee may also be authorized to pay for the support of the institutions of religion in the church where the lunatic and his family were accustomed to worship at the time when his mental faculties became impaired, such sums as the lunatic may from time to time desire him to pay, not exceeding an annual sum named by the court as that which the lunatic had been accustomed to pay for such purposes while he was in possession of his mental faculties. But the court cannot authorize the committee to be the almoner of the general charities of the lunatic.⁶

5. Support and Maintenance of Lunatic's Family and Relatives — a. LUNATIC'S WIFE AND CHILDREN. — The lunatic is chargeable with the maintenance of his own family; accordingly, after his own needs are provided for, persons for whom he is legally bound to provide are entitled to be cared for out of the income of his estate.⁷

of a sum necessary for the lunatic's support from the executors and legatees of a testator who imposed this charge on such a contingency. Ashley v. Holman, 44 S. Car. 145.

2. Patton v. Thompson, 2 Jones Eq. (55 N. Car.) 413; Kennedy v. Johnston, 65 Pa. St. 455, 3 Am. Rep. 650.

3. Property Within Jurisdiction Primary Fund. — Matter of Taylor, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 611.

4. Matter of Taylor, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 619.

The Court Cannot Send the Estate of an Insane Person Out of Its Jurisdiction, but where the lunatic resides in another state and has a guardian in such other state, the court may make an annual allowance for his maintenance to be paid to the guardian abroad. McNeely v. Jamison, 2 Jones Eq. (55 N. Car.) 186.

Where a Lunatic Has Been Supported at State Expense, the court, on petition or bill by the attorney for the commonwealth, may decree in behalf of the commonwealth, out of the profits of the lunatic's estate, against the person having his estate, the past expenses of keeping such lunatic, though residing in a different county from that in which the inquisition is taken, process being served on the lunatic in the county where suit is brought. Coleman v. Lunatic Asylum, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 241.

5. Traveling Expenses — Going Beyond Jurisdiction. — Matter of Colah, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 540.

In In re Halkett, 3 Ir. Ch. 375, the lunatic was transferred from Ireland to England. It was beyond the jurisdiction of the chancellor having custody of his person, but the jurisdiction of each chancellor was a part of the prerogative of the same sovereign. See also Matter of Houston, 1 Russ. 312; Matter of Jones, 1 Phil. 461.

6. Charitable Enterprises. — Matter of Heeney, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 326. See also In re Strickland, L. R. 6 Ch. 226.

7. Support of Lunatic's Family. — Bird v. Leffevre, 4 Bio. C. C. 100; Conduit v. Soane, 5 Myl. & C. 111; Nettleship v. Nettleship, 10 Sim. 236; Edwards v. Abrey, 2 Phil. 37; Jones v. Bruce, 11 Sim. 221; Matter of Latham, 4 Ired. Eq. (39 N. Car.) 235; Brooks v. Brooks, 3 Ired. L. (25 N. Car.) 389.

Support and Care of Wife. — The husband is liable for the support of his wife, and his insanity does not relieve him from that obligation. His committee should therefore provide for her support out of his estate.¹ She is entitled to medical attention when ill, and the physician who renders it upon the request of the committee of the insane husband is entitled to compensation out of his estate in the hands of his committee;² and in case of her death the committee of her husband is justified in paying her funeral expenses though she had a separate estate and left a will providing for the payment of her debts and funeral expenses.³

Children. — Allowances should likewise be made for the maintenance and support of the lunatic's children.⁴

Marriage Portion. — An allowance may be made out of the estate of a lunatic as a marriage portion for his daughter and to pay for her outfit on her marriage;⁵ but it seems that such allowance should not be made unless the daughter makes a settlement of her property to be approved by the court.⁶

b. LUNATIC'S STEPCHILDREN. — Chancellor Walworth considered it competent for a court of chancery to direct an allowance for the support of the lunatic's stepdaughter, provided the income of the estate was more than enough for the wants of the lunatic and of those who had a legal claim upon him, and it being made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the lunatic himself would have made provision for her were he legally competent to do so.⁷

c. LUNATIC'S ADOPTED CHILDREN. — The court may make an allowance out of the income of a lunatic's estate for the education of persons whom he had adopted as children while he was in a sound state of mind.⁸

d. LUNATIC'S ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN. — An allowance may be made out of a lunatic's estate for his illegitimate children, but not for their mother.⁹

In North Carolina, under sections 2273, 2274, and 2278 of the Code, a wife who lives in the mansion house of her insane husband has the right to remain there and to use such supplies as may have been provided for his family, or a sufficient quantity of them to maintain her and her family according to their condition in life, as determined by the situation and resources of the husband. In re Hybart, 119 N. Car. 359.

3. Wife's Funeral Expenses. — In re Stewart, (N. J. 1891) 22 Atl. Rep. 122.

4. Children. — Foster v. Marchant, 1 Vern. 262.

Chancellor Walworth said the court would, when the estate would warrant it, make allowances "almost as a matter of course in reference to the children of the lunatic or other descendants who are presumptively entitled to his estate in case of his death, and where there is but little or no hope of his recovery." Matter of Willoughby, 11 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 257.

Adult Children — Hotchpot. — Continuing, the same learned judge said: "My present recollection is that in all those cases I required the adult children, who were competent to support themselves, to give a stipulation that the amounts advanced to them respectively should be brought into hotchpot upon the death of the lunatic, if any part of his personal estate should come to them under the statute of distributions. This principle, of considering the allowance as an advance, to be brought into hotchpot in distribution, has not, however, been extended to children of the lunatic who were sickly or decrepit so as to give them a special claim upon the estate of the lunatic for a support."

5. Daughter's Marriage Portion. — Matter of Drummend, 1 Myl. & C. 627. In a note to this case it was said: "Orders of a similar kind, on the marriage of the daughters of lunatics, have been made in several recent cases." Citing Matter of Baker, March 25, 1830; Matter of Craver, April 8, 1830; Matter of Goldsmid, March 12, 1835.

9. Illegitimate Children and Their Mother. — Ex p. Haycock, 5 Russ. 154.

In re Jodrell, Shelf. on Lunacy 161, Lord Lyndhurst made an allowance out of the estate for the education of a natural child of a lunatic.

e. LUNATIC'S COLLATERAL KINDRED — Power to Order Allowance. — The court of chancery has the power to provide out of the surplus income of the estate of a lunatic for the support of one who is not his next of kin, and whom the lunatic is under no legal obligation to support, where the chancellor is satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt that the lunatic himself would have provided for the support of such person if he had remained of sound mind so as to be legally competent to do so.¹

But Great Caution Should Be Exercised in respect to making allowances to the relatives of a lunatic for whom he is not legally bound to provide;² and in several cases it has been said that the practice ought rather to be narrowed than extended.³

The Amount and Proportions of such allowances, when made, are entirely within the discretion of the court.⁴

Principle Upon Which Court Acts. — In all such cases the court should see what the lunatic would himself do if he were sane, and act accordingly.⁵

f. LUNATIC'S BROTHER'S ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN. — The court refused to make an allowance for the illegitimate children of a deceased brother of a lunatic, to whose support he would probably have contributed if he had remained sane.⁶

g. LUNATIC'S PERSONAL SERVANTS. — In one instance an annuity was allowed as a retiring pension to an old personal servant of the lunatic who was, by reason of the infirmities of old age, compelled to retire from his service.⁷

6. Sales, Transfers, and Incumbrances — a. GENERAL RULES. — In cases of lunacy the first care of the court, as has been already stated, is the maintenance of the lunatic; and after that, it is a rule not to vary or charge the prop-

Brothers and Sisters. — In Ex p. Whitbread, 2 Meriv. 102, Lord Eldon said: "Where a large property devolves upon an elder son, who is a lunatic, as heir at law, and his brothers and sisters are slenderly or not at all provided for, the court will make an allowance to the latter for the sake of the former; upon the principle that it would naturally be more agreeable to the lunatic, and more for his advantage, that they should receive an education and maintenance suitable to his condition, than that they should be sent into the world to disgrace him as beggars."

Nephews. — In Matter of Blair, 1 Myl. & C. 300, the court, with considerable reluctance, made an allowance out of the income of a female lunatic for the better maintenance of her nephews. For a case where an allowance was made to a nephew who was tenant in tail in remainder of estates of which his insane uncle was tenant for life, upon the terms of the estate being charged with the repayment of the amounts received, see In re Sparrow, 20 Ch. D. 320.

Cousins. — In In re Croft, 32 L. J. Ch. 481, the court made an allowance for the first cousin of a lunatic, the other next of kin consenting.

An allowance was refused to an aged clergyman, a first cousin and one of the next of kin of the lunatic, who was reduced to indigence by unavoidable misfortune, it not being shown that the lunatic had ever known of his existence, or done anything for him, or expressed an intention in his favor. In re Evans, 21 Ch. D. 297.

In one instance weekly allowances were directed in favor of six needy cousins who were supposed to be the next of kin of the lunatic, it appearing that they were very poor, that the lunatic had expressed an intention in their favor, and that the income of the estate far exceeded the wants of the lunatic. In re Frost, L. R. 5 Ch. 699. See also In re MacKenzie, 43 L. T. N. S. 681.

A first cousin who was partially and voluntarily supported by a person when in his right mind is not dependent upon him within the meaning of section 2274 of the North Carolina Code so as to be entitled to support from his estate when declared a lunatic. In re Hybart, 119 N. Car. 359.

7. Servants. — Matter of Carysfort, Cr. & Ph. 76. Lord Cottenham considered the case a worthy one, and the committees "were satisfied that the allowance was one which the lunatic, if he should ever recover, would approve." It was conceded, however, that there was no precedent for it.

erty of the lunatic so as to effect any alteration as to the succession to it.¹

b. OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—(1) In General.—In the absence of any statutory restraint in that regard it seems that the committee of a lunatic may sell and transfer the personal property of his ward without license from any judicial tribunal when in his judgment such sale will be advantageous to the lunatic;² but it is the safer and perhaps the usual course to make application to the court having jurisdiction of the lunacy proceedings for an order authorizing such sales; and this of course must be done where the statute requires it.³

(2) For Payment of Debts.—The court will not make an order for the payment of the lunatic's debts out of funds not within the reach of his creditors, except for his accommodation where it clearly appears that he will have a sufficient maintenance left;⁴ and according to the early English cases the court would make no provision for the payment of his debts out of any fund, if the result would be to leave him destitute.⁵ Still, the court will not refuse to assist creditors when assistance can be given without prejudice to the lunatic.⁶

c. OF REAL ESTATE—(1) Power to Sell—(a) General Rules.—In England the power of the committee to sell the land of his ward, even for the payment of his debts, by direction of the chancellor, did not exist until conferred by statute in the year 1803.⁷ Under a recent statute the judge may direct that any property of the lunatic, whether present or future, be sold, charged, mortgaged, dealt with, or disposed of as he thinks most expedient for the purpose of raising or securing, or repaying with or without interest, money which is to Stop Order on Estate.—The court refused to make an order in the nature of a stop order on the lunatic's estate in favor of an assignee of his next of kin. In re Wilkinson, L. R. 10 Ch. 73, overruling Matter of Pigott, 3 Macn. & G. 263.

Specific Legacy.—Where it appeared that the lunatic when sane, had bequeathed certain furniture to a particular individual, the court refused to defeat the intention thus manifested by ordering the sale of the furniture notwithstanding the committee had reported that the sale would be beneficial to the estate. Ex p. Haycock, 5 Russ. 154. Compare Jones v. Green, L. R. 5 Eq. 555.

By order of the court the guardian may rightfully sell the personal property of the lunatic for the payment of his debts, provided there is no fraud in the proceeding. Howard v. Thompson, 8 Ired. L. (30 N. Car.) 367.

In North Carolina the court of probate has no power to sell property for, or to order the payment of, debts contracted prior to the lunacy, or to entertain a suit at the instance of such creditors. Such jurisdiction remains in the superior courts, where it was always lodged, on the equity side at least. Blake v. Respess, 77 N. Car. 193; Smith v. Pipkin, 79 N. Car. 569.

Community Property.—The wife of an insane person cannot authorize the sale of community property to pay antecedent debts of her husband. Cason v. Laney, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 420; Heidenheimer v. Thomas, 63 Tex. 289.

7. Power to Sell Lands—In England.—Stat. 43 Geo. III., c. 75, § 4.

To Prevent Bill by Creditors.—The lord chancellor could not, upon a petition in lunacy, order that part of the lunatic's real estate be sold for payment of his debts, in order to prevent a bill by his creditors. Ex p. Smith, 5 Ves. Jr. 556; Ex p. Dikes, 8 Ves. Jr. 79.

Title to Leasehold.—Neither could the chancellor, by an order in lunacy, make an absolute title to the lunatic's leasehold estate. Ex p. Dikes, 8 Ves. Jr. 79.

Sales of Copyhold Estates of lunatics were not authorized by the statute 43 Geo. III., c. 75. Ex p. Birch, 3 Swanst. 98.

But the statute 59 Geo. III., c. 80, § 2, extends the power of sale to estates held by ancient demesne or copy of court roll. See 3 Swanst. 98, note.

Where a Lunatic Took as Devisee an estate charged by the will with the payment of the testator's debts, the court had power to order a sale of the land to pay such debts in case there was not sufficient personal property to pay them. Williams v. Whinyates, 2 Bro. C. C. 399.

be or which has been applied to the payment of the lunatic's debts or engagements; the discharge of any incumbrance on his property; the payment of any debt or expenditure incurred for the lunatic's maintenance or otherwise for his benefit; or the payment of or provision for the expenses of his future maintenance; and the judge may, by order, authorize and direct the committee of the estate of a lunatic, inter alia, to sell any property belonging to the lunatic.¹

In the United States it has been held that it is competent for the chancery court, under its general powers over the estates of lunatics, to order the sale of a lunatic's land for his support and maintenance, or for the reimbursement of the committee for moneys expended by him in supporting the lunatic.² It is now very generally provided by statute that when necessity or the prudent management of the estate requires the sale of a lunatic's land, it may be sold with the sanction of the court in the manner provided in such statutes.³ But a court of equity has no jurisdiction to decree a sale of the estate of a

Exchange of Lands. — Under the Lunacy Regulation Act of 1853, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 70, § 124, it was held that the court had power to make an exchange of the land of a lunatic without the mines and minerals under it. It appeared that a conveyance of the minerals would cause great inconvenience, and that the proposed exchange was quite in accordance with the custom of the country. In re Dicconson, 15 Ch. D. 316.

Reconveyance. — Under the statute 1 Wm. IV., c. 60, § 3, the committee ad interim could not be empowered to reconvey land of which the lunatic was found to be mortgagee. Matter of Poulton, 1 Macn. & G. 100.

Committee Empowered to Concur in Deeds of Partnership Property. — In one case the court empowered the committee of an insane partner, with the sanction of the master in lunacy, to concur in all deeds of the partnership property which should have been executed by the other partners. *Lawrie v. Tenant in Tail in Remainder of Stock Authorized to Dispose Thereof. — Under the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 74, the lord chancellor, as protector under the act for the abolition of fines and recoveries, made an order to enable a quasi tenant in tail in remainder of a sum of stock, of which the tenant for life was a lunatic, to dispose of the fund. Grant v. Yea, 3 Myl. & K. 245. But Lord Cottenham refused to make such an order where the object was to give a benefit to the husband of one member of the lunatic's family at the expense of another member. Matter of Newman, 2 Myl. & C. 112.

Where the Tenant in Tail in Possession Is a Lunatic, the lord chancellor has authority under the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 74, to permit the first tenant in tail in remainder to bar the subsequent limitations, on a proper case being made out for the exercise of such authority. Matter of Blewitt, 6 De G. Effect of Supersedeas of Commission. — Under the Kentucky statute, the court has ample power to entertain the suit of a committee of a lunatic for the sale of his estate for the payment of his debts. And where the court has rightfully acquired jurisdiction in such proceedings, a subsequent supersedeas of the commission and a restitution of the lunatic to the control of his estate will not deprive the court of its authority to sell his property to pay his debts. *Salter v. Married Women. — The Illinois statutes of 1845 and 1853 were held applicable to insane married women, notwithstanding the common law governing the rights of married women obtained in this state at the time of their enactment. Gardner v. Maroney, 95 Ill. 552.

Nonresidents. — The Illinois Act of 1853 has no reference whatever to nonresident owners. It applies only to cases where the insane person and his conservator reside in the state. Sales by nonresident conservators are authorized by the Act of 1865. Wing v. Dodge, 80 Ill. 564.

Public Sale — Notice. — In Pennsylvania the Court of Common Pleas may authorize the committee of a lunatic to sell at public sale, or mortgage, his real estate for the payment of his debts, the maintenance of his family, and the education of his minor children; but it has no power to decree a private sale for any purpose, and no jurisdiction to entertain a petition therefor. And it is requisite to the court's jurisdiction that it appear upon the face of the petition that notice to the wife, if any, and the next of kin of the lunatic had been given as required by statute. Bennett v. Hayden, 145 Pa. St. 586.

In Maryland the court has power under the statute (now Pub. Gen. Laws 1888, art. 16, lunatic for his maintenance and support, or to effect a change of investment, until his lunacy has been established by the inquisition of a jury, and a guardian, committee, or trustee to take charge of his person and estate has been appointed according to law; and the application for such sale must be made by the guardian, committee, or trustee of the lunatic.¹

(b) For Support and Maintenance. — The personal property of a lunatic is the primary fund for his support and that of his family, and the general rule is that his real estate cannot be sold for that purpose until his personal estate is exhausted.²

(c) For Better Investment. — A court of equity has no inherent jurisdiction to decree the sale of a lunatic's lands for the purpose of better investment.³

(d) For Payment of Taxes. — Where there are no funds in the hands of the committee to pay taxes on the lunatic's real property the court may order it or a portion of it to be sold to pay the taxes.⁴

(e) Real Estate of Insane Married Women. — The real estate of an insane married woman during her coverture and insanity can be charged with indebtedness only to the same extent as if she were not insane, and neither her committee nor a court of equity can subject the corpus of such real estate to debts or claims with which it would not be chargeable if she were sane.⁵ But in Illinois it cannot be objected to a conveyance by her conservator that there could § 103) to decree the sale of the real property to pay necessary expenses incurred by the committee for the support and maintenance of the lunatic, without exposing him to the expense and delay incident to a regular chancery proceeding. Matter of Dorney, 59 Md. 68. See Willis v. Hodson, 79 Md. 330, set out infra, in the subdivision For Better Investment.

Death of Lunatic Pending Distribution of Proceeds. — Where the real estate of a lunatic is sold under the provisions of the Pennsylvania Act of June 13, 1836, § 22, P. L. 597, and the lunatic dies pending the distribution by an auditor of the fund arising therefrom, the proceeding is not stayed or the course of distribution altered by the lunatic's death. Wheatland's Appeal, 125 Pa. Accepting Worthless Security. — If the committee, in violation of an order of the court, accepts a worthless security in payment of the purchase price of the property of the lunatic, the latter's heirs at law will, after his death, have an equitable lien on the property sold, which they may enforce by foreclosure and sale. Walrath v. Abbott, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 445.

Oil and Natural Gas are a part of the realty in which they exist, and if they belong to a lunatic his committee can sell or lease them only by decree of court, as in other sales of his realty. South Penn Oil Co. v. McIntire, 44 W. Va. 296.

1. Previous Finding of Lunacy Requisite. — Hamilton v. Traber, 78 Md. 26, 44 Am. St. Rep. 258.

Under the Settled Land Act of 1882, the court has no power to dispose of the life estate of a lunatic until he is so found by inquisition and a committee of his estate is appointed. In re Baggs, (1894) 2 Ch. 416, note.

But under the Lunacy Act of 1890, section 120, the quasi committee appointed to manage the estate of a person who through mental infirmity is incapable of managing his own affairs may be authorized to sell a settled life estate of such person. In re X, (1894) 2 Ch. 415.

Statutes. — In Maryland the power of the court to sell for better investment is derived from sections 98, 100, and 124, art. 16, of the Code. And to give jurisdiction to the court there must be a summons and a return of the summons "as served," in the case of a resident of the state, or in the case of a nonresident there must be "proof of due publication of the order of publication." Willis v. Hodson, 79 Md. 327. See Matter of Dorney, 59 Md. 68, set out supra, in the subdivision General Rules.

be no conveyance by her, even of her separate estate, without joining with her husband, for the statutes in reference to conveyances by married women have no relation whatever to conveyances by conservators. The latter are governed entirely by the statute in relation to idiots and lunatics.¹

(2) Subject to Existing Liens—Guardian's Covenants.—The committee must sell the lunatic's real estate subject to all outstanding liens and incumbrances thereon; and a bond executed by him conditioned to remove such liens will not bind the lunatic's estate.²

Covenants.—Neither has he any power to bind the estate of his ward by covenants in his deed; such covenants, if valid at all, bind the committee personally and not the estate which he represents.³

(3) Under Existing Mortgage or Trust Deed.—If the owner of real property makes a valid mortgage or trust deed and afterwards becomes insane, his insanity will not affect a subsequent sale of the land under the power of sale in such instrument.⁴

Real Estate Held by Lunatic in Trust.—But equity has no power to order the guardian of a lunatic, on a bill by the guardian to which his ward is not a party, to transfer real estate which the lunatic held in trust, to the beneficiaries or their nominees.⁵

(4) Partition Sales.—The estate of a lunatic may be transferred to another by means of proceedings in partition, for it could not be endured that the insanity of one cotenant should prevent the rest, for an indefinite time, from having their estate in severalty.⁶

(5) Leases—(a) Inherent Power of Court.—The committee of a lunatic cannot make leases or in any way encumber the lunatic's estate without special order of the court, where the profits are not sufficient to maintain the lunatic;⁷ and unless empowered by statute the court cannot make or authorize a lease of a lunatic's land to extend beyond the period of lunacy, for the tenant may be ejected by the lunatic if he recovers.⁸

(b) Statutory Authority.—This matter is now quite generally regulated by statutes which provide that the committee may, when such course appears to be for the lunatic's interest, apply to the court for leave to lease the whole or Conveyance of Lunatic's Undivided Share.—See Matter of Bloomer, 2 De G. & J. 88, where, under the Trustee Act 1850, and the Lunacy Regulation Act 1853, the lords justices considered themselves authorized to direct the committee to convey the lunatic's undivided share according to the partition.

But the Lunatic Must Be Brought Before the Court in some proper form, and any irregularity in bringing him in may be cured by a subsequent amendment. Rogers v. McLean, 34 N. Y. 536.

Proceeds Subject to Same Uses as Estate Before

Sale.—Where partition was ordered the court directed that the proceeds of the sale should be subject to the same uses as the lunatic's estate was subject to before the sale. In re Pares, 12 Ch. D. 333.

7. Leases.—Foster v. Marchant, 1 Vern. 262; Drury v. Fitch, Hutt. 16; Blewitt's Case, Ley 47; Beverley's Case, 4 Coke 127; Knipe v. Palmer, 2 Wils. C. Pl. 130.

A South Carolina case contains a dictum that "the only restraint imposed upon the committee operates to prevent their binding the lunatic after his restoration, and that letting out the land from year to year is no violation of the rule." De Treville v. Ellis, Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 518.

Agreement by Committee to Lease.—The committee's agent agreed with C. to loan to the latter a part of the ward's estate. No formal agreement was signed, nor was the sanction of the master in lunacy applied for, but C. entered into possession with the knowledge of the committee and expended a considerable sum in improvements. The court ordered the committee to grant a lease in accordance with the terms settled between C. and the agent, saying that the court would do on behalf of a lunatic what a just and reasonable owner would do. In re Wynne, L. R. 7 Ch. 229.

such part of his estate as may, under the circumstances, be deemed most advantageous to him.¹

(c) Renewal of Leases — Where Lunatic Is Lessee — Form of Lease. — Where a lease was renewed for the benefit of the lunatic's estate Lord Eldon said that if the lease was at the time of the lunacy made to some other person in trust for the lunatic, he should continue it so, as in that case he should not change the estate; but if the lease was in the lunatic himself, and only taken out of him by the act of the court, the new lease ought to be made to the lunatic himself, and not to his committee.²

Old Tenants to Be Preferred. — In an early case it was said that the court possesses the discretion of a landlord in the management of the real estate of lunatics and infants, and should exercise it in making lettings, to give a preference to the old tenants.³

(6) Mortgages. — Under the rule restraining the committee of a lunatic from encumbering his ward's estate, the committee had no power to mortgage any part of the lunatic's real estate;⁴ but modern statutes usually provide that such real estate may be mortgaged by order of the court when it appears to be necessary or expedient in the prudent management of the estate.⁵

(7) Extinguishment of Dower. — An Insane Wife cannot release her dower rights.⁶

Nor Has Her Committee the power to execute any instrument which would

1. Statutory Authority as to Leases — England. — A person appointed under section 116 of the Lunacy Act 1890, to act as committee of the estate of a person lawfully detained as a lunatic, though not so found by inquisition, may by leave of a judge exercise the power of leasing vested in the lunatic as tenant for life under the Settled Land Act of 1882. In re Salt, (1896) 1 Ch. 117. See also In re Ray, 25 Ch. D. 464.

Connecticut. — The conservator of an idiot is not empowered by virtue of his office to make a lease of his ward's real estate where the statute has given such power to the court exclusively. Treat v. Peck, 5 Conn. 280.

If, under such circumstances, the committee leases his ward's land without the sanction of the court, his lessee is merely a tenant at will; and if he commits waste he becomes a trespasser ab initio, and the lunatic, being the general owner of the land, may maintain trespass quare clausum fregit against him. Treat v. Peck, 5 Conn. 280.

But now in that state, under Laws 1885, c. 110, §§ 81, 84, conservators of lunatics have power to make leases for a reasonable time of the real estate of their wards. Palmer v. Cheseboro, 55 Conn. 114.

New York. — In this state, if a lease is necessary to accomplish specified results, the court is expressly authorized to order it. Laws 1874, c. 446, p. 571; Code Civ. Pro., § 2338 et seq. But neither at common law nor under this statute has the committee any authority to lease his ward's estate without an order of the court. Pharis v. Gere, 110 N. Y. 336; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Barnard, 96 N. Y. 525.

Pennsylvania. — If, in the judgment of the committee, the interest of the lunatic and his family will best be promoted by leasing the whole or a part of the homestead and providing for his wife and family elsewhere, he should represent the facts to the court and ask for instructions. Shaffer v. List, 114 Pa. St. 486.

3. In re Ball, 1 Molloy 141.

Abatement of Rent. — It is within the discretion of the court to direct an abatement in the rent paid by the tenant of a lunatic's estate, even without a reference, where the application is made by the committee. In re Fitch, 1 Russ. & M. 354; Anonymous, 2 Molloy 343.

But in Ex p. Town, T. & R. 137, the court refused to direct a reference to the master as to the reduction of rent upon the petition of a tenant of the lunatic's estate.

4. Mortgages. — Foster v. Marchant, 1 Vern. 262.

To Pay Costs in Partition Suit. — It was held that the court had no jurisdiction to authorize the committee to mortgage the land of a lunatic for the purpose of raising money to pay his costs in a partition suit. Matter of Bloomar, 2 De G. F. & J. 154.

5. To Raise Money for Lunatic's Support. — Kent v. Morrison, 153 Mass. 137, 25 Am. St. Rep. 616; In re Eckstein, 1 Pa. L. J. Rep. 224, 2 Pa. L. J. 126.

Sale under Authority to Mortgage — Innocent Purchaser. — Where the committee sells the lunatic's real estate under an order giving him leave to mortgage it, such sale is void, though he obtains an affirmation thereof by the court. But an innocent purchaser may be entitled to an equitable lien on the property for the amount of the purchase money paid. Reals v. Weston, (Supm. Ct. Tr. T.) 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 67.

Releasing Portion of Lands from Lien of Mortgage. — Where the committee had invested money of the lunatic in a real-estate mortgage, it was held that he might release a portion of the premises from the lien thereof without applying to the court for permission to do so. Pickersgill v. Read, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 170.

operate to extinguish or release her inchoate right of dower.¹

And the Husband of an Insane Wife cannot, by proceedings on an ex parte petition, deprive his wife of her contingent right of dower in real estate which he is about to sell. The wife must be made a party to the proceeding, and after notice must have an opportunity to be heard.²

The Wife of a Lunatic does not relinquish her right of dower in the land of her husband, sold by his guardian, by joining with her husband in signing a deed thereto. She is not bound unless the deed of her husband is valid, and he is incapacitated to execute a deed even with the assent of his guardian.³

d. EFFECT UPON CHARACTER OF PROPERTY — (1) General Rule — (a) In Sales of Realty. — Where the real estate of a lunatic has been sold, the proceeds of the sale are, as between the real and personal representatives of the lunatic, to be treated as realty for the purpose of transmission.⁴

Money Recovered as Damages to the Fee for operating an elevated railroad in the street in front of a lunatic's real property retains its character of real estate, and upon his death his heirs at law are entitled to receive it.⁵ But money so realized is considered personalty after it reaches the hands of the heir.⁶

Heir Dying Without Making Election. — Where money has been raised by sale or mortgage of a lunatic's land, and his heir has died also a lunatic without having elected to take the surplus money as personalty, it descends in the character of realty.⁷

Fund Claimed as Personalty. — Where the interest in lands of a monomaniac who had never been declared a lunatic was sold in partition, and the proceeds were paid into court, and he had recognized and claimed them as personalty, they, together with the accrued interest, were adjudged to be of that character.⁸

(b) Upon Investment of Personalty. — If the committee of a lunatic invests a portion of his personal estate in the purchase of land, it will remain personal property in the hands of the committee, and in case of the lunatic's death will go to his personal representative.⁹ So if the committee uses money of the lunatic to pay off a mortgage on his real estate, the amount ought to be raised out of the real estate and paid to his personal representative at his death.¹⁰ The ordinary and necessary repairs upon a lunatic's real estate should be borne by the personal estate; but an extraordinary outlay of the personal estate, such as the purchase of land, or the building of houses, should retain its character of personalty.¹¹

(c) Timber Severed from Soil. — Timber felled on the lunatic's estate by his committee by order of the court becomes personal property, and upon the lunatic's death such timber or the unexpended proceeds thereof will go to his personal representative.¹²

(2) Exceptions for Benefit of Lunatic — General Principles. — But the governing principle in the management of the estate is the lunatic's interest, not that of those who may have eventual rights of succession. Upon this principle it is settled that the property of a lunatic may be converted from realty into personalty or from personalty into realty whenever it shall appear to be for the interest of the lunatic to make such change, without regard to the contingent interests of his real and personal representatives.¹

For Improvements. — If it is clearly for the lunatic's advantage that the nature of one part of his estate should be altered for the improvement of the other, such alteration will be directed.² And where such alteration has been made there is no equity between the real and personal representatives at the lunatic's death to have the nature of the property restored.³

7. Relative Powers and Duties of Committee and Prior Trustee. — The appointment of a committee does not ipso facto divest the authority of a testamentary trustee holding funds for the benefit of the lunatic. The committee takes the estate subject to the execution of the trust and the rights of the remote beneficiaries of the funds.⁴ But, though the trustee may lawfully hold the corpus of the estate, the committee is entitled to the annual income, interest, and profits thereof, in order to appropriate them to the support and maintenance of the lunatic as well as for medical services in the endeavor to restore his reason.⁵

8. Accounting — a. ANNUAL ACCOUNTS — (1) Duty to Make. — Since the committee of the estate of a lunatic acts as the bailiff or officer of the court in the management of the lunatic's affairs, he will not ordinarily be appointed without liability to render an annual account of his doings.⁶ But where the property of the lunatic is very small, a committee may be appointed without liability to annual account, in order to avoid the expense of such accounting.⁷ And in Maryland it has been held that a committee may be appointed without liability to account, in consideration that he will provide suitable maintenance for the lunatic and make and return an inventory of his property.⁸ So the court may permit the committee to use as his own the real and personal property timber for repairs as the absolute owner. Ex p. Ludlow, 2 Atk. 407. But he has not, by virtue of his office, any right or authority to sell and dispose of timber and firewood growing on the land of his ward. Treat v. Peck, 5 Conn. 280.

Upon the principle stated in the text, a mortgage on a lunatic's estate was paid off and it was ordered that the mortgage term be assigned to attend the inheritance, and not in trust for the next of kin. Ex p. Grimstone, Ambl. 706. The authority of this case was doubted in Weld v. Tew, Beatty 266, but it was afterwards followed in Newcombe v. Newcombe, 3 Ir. Eq. 414, Drury 358.

4. Prior Trustees Not Displaced by Committee. — Canaday v. Hopkins, 7 Bush (Ky.) 108; In re Wilson, 2 Pa. St. 325. In this latter case the court said: "The testator had a right to appoint his own trustee; and if the office were vacant, the proper course would be to fill it by appointment, for which the lunatic's committee, whose business it is to call the trustee to account, would be the most improper person that could be selected."

Naked Authority in Executors to Restrain Alienation by Lunatic. — In Royer v. Meixel, 19 Pa. erty of the lunatic, without accounting for the profits until further order, upon his undertaking to account and deliver when called on by order of the chancellor or in any other legal manner.¹ In such cases, however, he should have the previous sanction of the court for not passing his accounts annually.²

(2) Not Conclusive Evidence. — These annual or periodical accounts of the committee are filed for the information of the court and of those interested in the welfare of the lunatic and the preservation of his estate. They are only prima facie evidence of the matters therein contained, and consequently may be reopened and impeached upon the adjudication of the final account of the committee.³

(3) Creditor May Compel. — A creditor may compel the guardian to adjust his accounts, and if thereafter it is found that there is a balance in his hands, his refusal to pay a judgment recovered against his ward will be a breach of the condition of his bond, and the creditor's remedy is by an action on the guardianship bond.⁴

b. FINAL ACCOUNTING — (1) For Property Received — General Rule. — The committee, at the termination of his office, is bound to account for all the estate, income, and effects of the lunatic which came into his possession or under his care and direction.⁵ He is also chargeable with all that should have come into his possession by the exercise of due care and diligence.⁶

And if He Fails or Refuses to Account the court will, upon proper application, compel him or his personal representative to do so⁷ unless the parties interested Committee's Own Notes. — It is the duty of the committee to turn over to the administrator his own notes found among the lunatic's papers, although they appear to have been outlawed at the time of his appointment. In re Blossom, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 360.

Where Lunatic Indebted to Committee. — A curator of an interdicted person cannot keep the funds of the interdict without accounting for them to the probate court, under a claim that the interdict is indebted to him. He must account for the money received, and the indebtedness of the interdict, if it exists, must be settled and adjudicated under the supervision of the court. Nor can such curator, without proper judicial sanction, transfer his claim to another person and authorize such person to collect the money of the interdict and retain it in satisfaction of the debt so transferred. *McKenzie v. have slept on their rights until such a course would work a manifest hardship and injustice.¹

If a Guardian Becomes Non Compos Mentis without having settled his accounts, the court may compel or allow a settlement of such accounts by his guardian.²

(2) For Profits of Ward's Labor. — If a lunatic, bereft of his reason so far as to be unable to assent to a contract, is yet able to labor and does labor to the profit of another (in this case the committee), the law will imply an obligation on the part of the latter to pay therefor as fully as it does in cases where the parties are sane.³

(3) For Interest. — Generally the committee is to be charged only simple interest upon the balances found against him on a settlement of his account, compound interest not being chargeable except under very peculiar circumstances.⁴ But where it is made the duty of the guardian to lend out any balance in his hands upon bond with surety and to account for the interest annually, it follows that he is chargeable with compound interest on such balance.⁵ The committee is not, however, chargeable with interest on moneys kept in his hands pending the determination of conflicting claims of the lunatic's creditors.⁶

c. RESPONSIBILITY FOR SAFETY OF INVESTMENTS. — This topic will be fully discussed elsewhere in this work.⁷

d. ALLOWANCE OF ITEMS — (1) For Support of Ward. — If the estate of a lunatic is sufficient to permit it, he should be maintained in that degree of comfort which he had deemed fitting when he was sane;⁸ and thought he committee may not have been as economical of his expenditures in the care of a lunatic as he might have been, his account should be approved if it is clear that he was upright in the discharge of his trust, and that whatever unnecessary expenditures he made were in the interest of the personal comfort of his unfortunate ward.⁹

Liability of Sureties. — The general rule is that sureties on a bond are not liable for past defaults unless made so by the terms of the bond. And this rule applies when different bonds are given during the same appointment or term of office as well as where they are given under successive appointments. State v. Jones, 89 Mo. 470.

2. Where Committee Becomes Insane. — In such circumstances the proceedings are conducted in the name of the non compos guardian by his guardian, and the decree for any balance found against him is rendered against him individually, to be levied of his goods and chattels in the hands of his guardian. Moda-well v. Holmes, 40 Ala. 391.

3. Profits of Lunatic's Labor. — Ashley v. Holman, 15 S. Car. 97.

An order of the court of equity appointing a committee of a lunatic and authorizing the committee to retain the entire annual interest of the lunatic's estate for his support and maintenance is no bar to an action to require the committee to account for profit subsequently made to himself by the labor of his ward. Ashley v. Holman, 15 S. Car. 97.

Payment of Idiot's Debts. — Where it appeared that the idiot was without property or estate, but was possessed of musical ability, and that the committee had utilized his services in concerts given at the committee's own expense, it was held questionable whether the court would direct the application of any moneys thus realized to the payment of the debts of the incompetent person. Ackerman v. Bethune, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 126.

4. Interest. — Crigler v. Alexander, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 674. See also such titles as EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 11, p. 1211 et seq.; GUARDIAN AND WARD, vol. 15, p. 95 et seq.; TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

Question for Court. — Where the guardian of a person of unsound mind makes a contract with another for boarding, clothing, and caring for his ward, compensation for such services is a proper charge against the ward's estate, and the reasonableness of such a claim is a question for the court, after hearing and considering the evidence. Miller v. Hart, 135 Ind. 201.

9. Hain's Estate, 157 Pa. St. 61.

Sums expended for the purpose of rendering the lunatic and his wife comfortable in their declining years should be allowed to the committee. Deming v. Paynter, (Ky. 1897) 42 S. W. Rep. 1112.

If any item in the guardian's account is contested, evidence of the regularity and necessity of the expenditure should be required, and the facts found in relation thereto. McLean v. Breese, 109 N. Car. 564.

(2) For Improvements to Estate. — The committee may not, without the sanction of the court, expend large sums of money in making permanent improvements, even though he acts in good faith and such improvements are beneficial to his ward's estate;¹ and if he does so, the cost of the improvements should not be allowed in the settlement of his accounts.²

(3) For Counsel Fees. — The committee should receive credit for a reasonable fee paid to his counsel on final settlement;³ and so of counsel fees paid by him in the management of the estate.⁴ But to entitle him to an allowance for counsel fees on final settlement, he must show that he has already paid them.⁵

(4) For Costs. — The costs of a suit necessarily prosecuted or defended by the committee for the protection of his ward's estate should be allowed;⁶ but if he has gone recklessly into litigation or appears to have been actuated by malice his costs should not be allowed.⁷

(5) For Payment of Ward's Past Debts. — Although the committee has no right to deprive the lunatic or his family of comfortable support by paying his past debts,⁸ yet where he has in good faith paid such just debts without inconvenience to his ward or those dependent on his estate for support, the sums so paid may be allowed in the settlement of his accounts;⁹ and in one case at least credit has been given to the committee for making payment, after the death of his ward, of a just debt which he had incurred for him while he was living.¹⁰

1. Improvements — Dismissal of Committee. — Where the committee of a lunatic's estate had expended large sums in draining and other improvements, and had contracted with a railroad company for the sale of part of the estate, but in all this had acted in good faith and under the sanction of the master in lunacy, it was held that such acts were beyond the scope of his authority, but as they were manifestly beneficial to the estate they formed no grounds for his dismissal from office. Matter of Brown, 1 Macn. & G. 201.

2. Ex p. Marton, 11 Ves. Jr. 397; Ex p. Hilbert, 11 Ves. Jr. 397; Foster v. Marchant, 1 Vern. 262.

Exceeding Authorization of Court. — Where the committee had been authorized by the court to expend a certain sum in rebuilding a farmhouse, but expended half as much again in building one of larger size on a different site, the excess was not allowed, although what the committee had done appeared to be beneficial to the estate. Matter of Langham, 2 Phil. 299.

Disallowance of Cost of Building — Allowance of Rental. — In Murphy v. Walker, 131 Mass. 341, the court refused to allow the cost of a building erected by the committee because deemed necessary in the business of the ward, which he was conducting advantageously, with either the request or the concurrence of all the parties interested in the lunatic's estate; but a reasonable rental was allowed.

3. Counsel Fees. — Devilbiss v. Bennett, 70 Md. 554; In re Blossom, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 360.

Defending His Reports Against Charge of Fraud. — An allowance made to the guardian of an insane ward for an attorney's fee in defending his reports when assailed as being fraudulent and unjust is proper and should be approved. Warfield v. Warfield, 74 Iowa 184.

6. Allowance of Costs. — Bulows v. O'Neal, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 394.

A guardian who has been compelled to pay costs in a suit prosecuted by him for the recovery of his ward's property may be reimbursed if the expenditure was made properly and in good faith. Green v. Burgess, 117 N. Car. 495; McNeill v. Hodges, 83 N. Car. 504.

Expenses in Resisting Application for Revocation of Guardianship. — Expenses incurred by the guardian in resisting the application of the ward for a revocation of the guardianship on the ground of restoration to sanity will be allowed in the settlement of the guardian's accounts, when they are reasonable and incurred in good faith and under a reasonable doubt whether the ward was so far restored as to render the continuance of the guardianship unnecessary. Palmer v. Palmer, 38 N. H. 418.

7. In re Montgomery, 1 Molloy 419. See also Ashley v. Holman, 44 S. Car. 145.

8. Past Debts of Ward. — The ultimate benefit of a lunatic is of so great consideration that Lord Eldon said he could not order the payment of a lunatic's past debts and leave him destitute, but must reserve a sufficient maintenance for him, although in consequence his creditors might put him in jail and the court would have to support him there. Ex p. Hastings, 14 Ves. Jr. 182.

9. Although the courts will not order the payment of a lunatic's debts contracted anterior to his lunacy, if it will deprive him or his family of maintenance, yet the disbursements will be allowed where, in the settlement of the guardian's account, the lunatic being dead and his only child of age, it appears that the guardian in good faith paid such debts without prejudice to the estate. McLean v. Breece, 113 N. Car. 390, 109 N. Car. 564; Adams v. Thomas, 83 N. Car. 521; Smith v. Pipkin, 79 N. Car. 569.

10. Interdiction of Onorato, 46 La. Ann. 73.

(6) For Damage to Guardian's Property by Ward. — The guardian of a lunatic cannot receive allowance in his probate account for the amount of damages occasioned to his own property by his ward's want of care.¹

(7) For Ward's Individual Debt to Guardian. — Neither can the guardian set off his ward's individual debt to him. He must account for the property in his hands, and then pursue another remedy to collect his own claim;² though it has been held that where the committee, prior to his appointment, has advanced money to the lunatic or paid claims against him, the sums thus expended should be allowed upon his accounting as committee.³

(8) Acting Without Authority — Void Appointment. — Where the appointment of the committee proves to be void, he nevertheless acts under color of authority, and he has an equitable right to be reimbursed for such expenditures as would have been reasonable and proper had his appointment been valid.⁴ And in Alabama it was held that when the appointment made by the probate court was void for want of jurisdiction, the committee might be charged as trustee in invitum and compelled to account in equity.⁵

9. Compensation of Guardian — a. IN ENGLAND — As a Rule No Compensation Allowed. — In England the court would not, as a rule, allow to the committee of a lunatic any compensation for his care and trouble.⁶

Where Extraordinary Care and Expense Involved. — In rare cases, however, where the care of the estate and the collection and remittance of the rents were attended with more than ordinary trouble and expense, the court would make a small allowance to the committee of the estate to meet such expense.⁷

Receiver with Salary. — And where no one could be found who was willing to serve as committee without compensation, the court would sometimes appoint a receiver with a reasonable salary;⁸ but in such cases the allowance was made not for the sake of the committee or receiver, but for the benefit of the lunatic's estate.⁹

Employment of Agent at Fixed Salary. — Again, in some cases where the lunatic's property was of such a character as to require constant personal attention, the court gave permission to the committee to employ an agent at a fixed salary to superintend the details of the management of the estate.¹⁰

Annual Sum for Maintenance — Accounting. — And where an annual sum of money

1. Torts by Ward Against Guardian. — A claim for unliquidated damages, as for assault and battery, or action on the case for negligence, by a guardian against his ward, cannot be made part of his account. It is not a matter arising from the trust. It is a question for a court of common law, to be tried at its bar and under its rules. Brown v. Howe, 9 Gray (Mass.) 85, 69 Am. Dec. 276.

2. Ward's Debts to Guardian. — McKenzie v. Bacon, 40 La. Ann. 157. See also Tally v. Tally, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (22 N. Car.) 385, 34 Am. Dec. 407.

5. Trustee in Invitum. — Moody v. Bibb, 50 Ala. 245. And here it was further held that under such circumstances the committee could not protect himself from thus accounting in equity by pleading a former settlement in the probate court which was void for lack of jurisdiction. See also Lockwood v. Mitchell, 7 Ohio St. 387, 70 Am. Dec. 78.

Where the brother of a lunatic was duly appointed his committee, but had managed the estate for nine years before the commission, during which time there was considerable savings, Lord Thurlow compelled him to pay interest on the savings in his hands, although he claimed that he had made no use of the money. Ex p. Chumley, 1 Ves. Jr. 156.

In Shepherd v. Newkirk, 21 N. J. L. 302, the defendant, having acted as guardian and accounted in such character, was held estopped, in an action of assumpsit by his former ward whose commission had been superseded, to deny his lawful appointment.

10. Matter of Brown, 1 Macn. & G. 201.

In Matter of Errington, 2 Russ. 567, Lord Eldon made an order, without a reference to the master, that the committee of a lunatic should be at liberty to employ a particular person for inspecting the lunatic's property, at a fixed salary to be paid out of the rents.

was ordered to be paid to the committee of the person for the maintenance of the lunatic, the committee was not bound to keep accounts, and as a general rule would not be ordered to account for any surplus remaining in his hands after supplying the lunatic's wants;¹ but where the lunatic was not properly maintained or the sum allowed had clearly not been expended in good faith, he might be ordered to account.²

b. IN UNITED STATES — Compensation Allowed. — In the United States, as early as the year 1817, Chancellor Kent decided that the committee of a lunatic was entitled to an allowance by way of compensation for his services in receiving and paying out moneys, within the equity of the statute authorizing the court to make a reasonable allowance to guardians, executors, and administrators for their services;³ and in the absence of express statutory provision for the compensation of such officers, this rule has been followed in other cases.⁴ In such cases the court makes the allowance according to some fixed rule, as two and one-half per cent. for receiving and two and one-half per cent. for disbursing all moneys that pass through the hands of the committee in the management of the lunatic's estate;⁵ but where the committee has had extraordinary trouble in the discharge of his duty compensation therefor may be allowed in addition to his commissions for collections and disbursements,⁶ though he is entitled to no extra compensation for ordinary services,⁷ such as are incidental to the trust and the prudent management of the property.⁸

VII. TERMINATION OF GUARDIANSHIP — 1. Death of Ward — Effect upon Court's Jurisdiction. — Upon the death of a lunatic under guardianship, the court has no further jurisdiction except to pass upon the accounts of his committee and deliver itself of the lunatic's property to the persons entitled to receive it.⁹

In the case of Sir William Dormer, a lunatic, the court allowed the entire profits of his estate to the committee for the maintenance of his person. After his death, his administrator brought a bill against the committee for an account of these profits, but the court refused the relief in the absence of a showing of gross fraud on the part of the committee. Sheldon v. Aland, 3 P. Wms. 104.

In his opinion in In re French, L. R. 3 Ch. 317, Lord Cairns alluded to two unreported cases in which an inquiry was directed as to the manner in which the committee had expended the money allowed for the lunatic's support. One was In re Rosoman, decided in 1822 by Lord Eldon, and the other In re Wood, before Lord Cottenham in 1839.

Government Bonds. — The committee is not entitled to a commission on the face value of a registered government bond belonging to his ward, but he is entitled to a commission of five per cent. on the interest accrued thereon and received by him. Gregory v. Parker, 87 Va. 451.

A Guardian Who Makes Up His Accounts Monthly may charge his ward's estate each month with his commissions on the amounts collected in that month, and with a month's interest on a balance from the preceding month in his own favor, and may carry the balance to the next month. May v. May, 109 Mass. 252.

The committee is entitled to commissions on the aggregate amount of the lunatic's personality, for receiving and paying out the money, whether it is disbursed as expenses in the administration of the trust or turned over to the lunatic's personal representative after his death. In re Blossom, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 360.

Guardian Clothed with Powers of Administrator. — In some states guardians of deceased lunatics are by statute vested with all the powers of administrators on estates and are controlled

The question of heirship¹ and the conflicting claims of creditors² will not be considered and determined as a part of the lunacy proceedings. Under some circumstances an order made in the lunacy proceedings before the lunatic's death may be carried into effect after his demise.³

Effect upon Committee's Authority. — So the death of a lunatic terminates the authority of his committee, whose duty it then becomes to settle his accounts and deliver such property as remains in his hands to the deceased lunatic's personal representatives or other persons entitled to receive it.⁴ And if it is not clear who is entitled to the possession of the property, the court may appoint a receiver to take charge of it until that question can be determined;⁵ otherwise it is the duty of the committee to take care of it until he is ordered by the court to give it up to those who have succeeded to the inheritance.⁶

2. Recovery of Lunatic. — Upon the recovery of a lunatic and a supersedeas of the commission, the committee and his bondsmen should, after a satisfactory accounting, be discharged from further responsibility.⁷

3. Resignation of Committee. — Independently of statutory permission, the committee of a lunatic cannot resign at his pleasure.⁸ In one case, however, the court seems to have allowed the committee to resign without questioning his right to do so.⁹

4. Removal of Committee. — The committee of a lunatic is at all times subject to the supervision and control of the court appointing him, and the court may revoke and annul his powers whenever from any cause it appears proper to do so.¹⁰

Where the Land of the Lunatic Has Been Leased his committee cannot enter and distrain for rent after the death of the lunatic. Persse v. Persse, Alc. & Nap. 35.

After Approval of the Committee's Report, and the surrender of the estate to his former ward, and discharge by the court, the committee will not be liable to an action on his bond by a creditor of such person for not paying the debt owing to such creditor. Morgan v. Hoyt, 69 Ill. 489.

Court Compelling Retransfer of Property. — After the discharge of the committee, the court cannot compel a retransfer of property by persons to whom such former incompetent person had transferred it subsequent to the committee's discharge. Matter of Dowd, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 688.

8. Resignation of Committee. — Evans v. Johnson, 39 W. Va. 299, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912.

In Matter of Lytle, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 251, Chancellor Walworth refused to allow the committee of a lunatic to resign although his situation was rendered very unpleasant in consequence of controversies existing among the members of the lunatic's family.

The Code of West Virginia, c. 118, § 1, allows a committee and fiduciary to resign on filing a petition and proceeding as therein directed. See Evans v. Johnson, 39 W. Va. 299, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912.

9. Morgan's Case, 3 Bland (Md.) 332.

In Ex p. Ord, Jac. 94, Lord Eldon said that it was the duty of a committee who had removed beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court to give up his office.

10. Removal of Committee. — Matter of Fitzgerald, 2 Sch. & Lef. 438; Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 420.

Removal Ex Parte. — But an order removing the guardian of a lunatic, made upon ex parte proceedings, without notice to such guardian, is void.¹

Failure to Pass Accounts or Make Report and File Inventory. — The committee may be discharged for not passing his accounts as required by law;² and so if he fails to make a report and file an inventory when ordered by the court to do so.³

A Committee Who Refuses to Defend an Action brought against his ward may be removed and a new committee appointed in his stead.⁴

And the Commitment of the Committee for Contempt of Court in the publication of a libelous pamphlet is sufficient ground for his removal from office.⁵

Residence at Distance. — The circumstance that the committee of the estate resides at a distance from the property is not per se a ground for discharging him, although it may raise a case for an inquiry as to the propriety of his discharge.⁶

The Effect of Insolvency or Bankruptcy of the committee is discussed elsewhere in this work.⁷

VIII. HUSBAND'S LIABILITY FOR MAINTENANCE OF INSANE WIFE. — It is the husband's primary duty to support his insane wife, and it is only when he is unable to do so that resort can be had for her maintenance to her separate estate.⁸ And in the case of an insane married woman, a trust fund provided for the purpose is to be applied to her maintenance in exoneration of her separate estate.⁹ If, however, her husband is unable to support her and provide proper medical treatment for her malady, resort may be had to her estate in presenti or expectancy in order to prevent her becoming a public charge or being left without assistance.¹⁰

IX. RESTRAINT OF INSANE PERSONS — 1. Without Warrant. — A Private Person may, without warrant or authority, confine a person disordered in his mind who seems disposed to do mischief to himself or another person, the restraint being necessary both for the safety of the lunatic and for the preservation of

The removal of a guardian by a decree of the Supreme Judicial Court terminates the guardianship, and sending the case back to the probate court for further proceedings does not qualify the terminating effect of the removal. Willwerth v. Leonard, 156 Mass. 277.

In Louisiana under article 398 of the Civil Code in force in 1866, it was held that the court could not rescind the appointment of an administrator pro tempore without good legal cause. State v. Judge, 18 La. Ann. 523.

The general rule, however, is that this is a matter of discretion with the court, and from an order of removal no appeal lies. Matter of Griffin, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 96; Black's Case, 18 Pa. St. 434. See also Dean's Appeal, 90 Pa. St. 106.

Statutes. — In California, "if indigent insane persons have kindred of degree of husband or wife, father, mother, or children, living within this state, of sufficient ability, who are otherwise liable, said kindred shall support such indigent insane person [while confined in a lunatic asylum] to the extent prescribed for paying patients." Watt v. Smith, 89 Cal. 602.

In Indiana, all insane persons having a legal residence in the state are entitled to be maintained at the expense of the state while confined in the lunatic asylum, and the husband is not liable for the support of his insane wife while she is confined in such institution. Marshall County v. Burkey, 1 Ind. App. 565.

the public peace.¹ But such restraint is unauthorized unless it is necessary to prevent some immediate injury by the lunatic to himself or others.²

Actual Insanity. — Nothing but actual insanity will authorize the seclusion of one who makes known his objections to restraint.³

Breach of Peace in Presence of Magistrate. — It is as much the right and duty of a magistrate to order the arrest of an insane person who is committing a breach of the peace in his presence as of a sane person under similar circumstances.⁴

2. False Imprisonment. — All persons who unite in the procurement of an illegal commitment for insanity are liable as for false imprisonment.⁵

3. Incarceration in Madhouse. — No person can legally be committed to an insane hospital unless it appears that the welfare of the patient or the safety of others requires such restraint.⁶

The Superintendent of an Insane Asylum is liable to an action for false imprisonment if the order under which a lunatic is detained is void. Palmer v. Buck, 83 Mich. 528.

In Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90, the question whether the superintendent of an asylum is liable for detaining a sane person whom in good faith he considers to be insane was left undecided; Campbell, C. J., and Cooley, J., holding the affirmative, and Graves and Marston, JJ., holding the negative.

Making and Filing a False Certificate as to the mental state of an alleged lunatic is not alone sufficient to render the physicians who did it liable for the subsequent wrongful arrest of such person. It must be shown that they caused his arrest. Force v. Probasco, 43 N. J. L. 539.

Malicious Prosecution. — One who maliciously and without probable cause institutes or procures to be instituted against another an inquisition of lunacy is liable to the latter on his discharge, in an action for malicious prosecution, for all damages suffered by him in excess of the taxable costs of such proceeding. *Lockenour v. When a Person Has Been Indicted and His Counsel Suggests His Insanity Before Trial, and a commission is appointed to inquire into his mental condition and reports him to be insane, and the jury returns a verdict accordingly, and the judge of the Criminal District Court remands him to the parish prison, without a commitment to the insane asylum, the judge of the Civil District Court has authority, under Rev. Stat. of Louisiana, § 1768, to inquire into the facts and circumstances of the case, and if in his opinion such person is dangerous to the citizens and the peace of the state, to commit him to the insane asylum of the state. State v. Uniacke, 48 La. Ann. 1230. See infra, this section, Those Charged with Crime.

In Rhode Island it is provided that a person adjudged to be insane shall be committed to a hospital for the insane unless a recognizance satisfactory to the court be then given that such person shall not be permitted to go at large until restored to soundness of mind. Senf v. Carpenter, 18 R. I. 545; Sherman's Petition, 17 R. I. 356.

A Person Who Has Been Discharged from the Insane Asylum by the supervisors of the insane cannot be recommitted under a revocation of that discharge by a single supervisor, although it was a condition of his original release that one supervisor might revoke the order of discharge. In re Thorpe, 64 Vt. 398.

tendent of the asylum to grant to him a certificate of discharge.¹

At Common Law it was an indictable offense forcibly to incarcerate one in a private madhouse, an institution unknown to the law and not under the supervision of any responsible authority.²

In England, in order to prevent a system of illegal restraint without the knowledge of the commissioners of lunacy, it has been made a misdemeanor for any person to receive two or more lunatics into any house, unless such house is an asylum or a hospital registered under the act, or a house for the time being duly licensed according to law.³

4. Right to Writ of Habeas Corpus — a. IN GENERAL. — Any one who is unlawfully restrained of his liberty as an insane person is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus upon a proper application made by him or by some friend in his behalf.⁴

Authority of Applicant. — Upon an application for the writ of habeas corpus in such cases, the party applying must make it appear that he has been duly authorized to do so by the alleged lunatic himself, unless the latter is so coerced as to be incapable of giving such authority.⁵

Upon the Return of Such Writ the fact of the party's insanity should be inquired into and determined, and if it appears that he is wrongfully detained, he should be set at liberty;⁶ but if it is revealed at the hearing that he is in fact insane, and the court is satisfied that restraint and medical treatment would be beneficial to him, he should not be discharged.⁷

b. THOSE CHARGED WITH CRIME. — Where one charged with crime is found to be insane and is for that reason held in custody, it seems that he is not entitled to a writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of obtaining his release,⁸ though it has been held that where the guilt of a party charged with a capital offense depended upon the issue of his sanity at the time of the commission of the imputed crime, he might have a writ of habeas corpus to determine whether or not he was entitled to be released on bail.⁹

5. Inquiry by Commission in Lunacy. — In New York, when the state commission in lunacy has reason to believe that any person adjudged insane is wrongfully deprived of his liberty or is improperly cared for, it may ascertain the facts or may order an investigation of the facts by one of its members, and the commission or the commissioner conducting the proceeding may issue compulsory process for the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, and exercise the powers conferred upon a referee of the Supreme Court.¹⁰

3. Under this statute (§ 9 Vict., c. 100, § 44) it is no defense that a person who receives two or more lunatics into his house for medical care and treatment is ignorant of the fact that they are lunatics, since it is the object of the act, when restraint is desirable, to place all such unfortunate persons under a competent authority. Reg. v. Bishop, 5 Q. B. D. 259.

In Massachusetts, so far as the Declaration of Rights is concerned, it has been determined that a person who is in fact insane is not entitled to be discharged from the hospital on habeas corpus provided the court is satisfied that the restraint and treatment there will be beneficial to him. In re Oakes, (Mass. 1845) 8 Law Rep. 122; *Denny v. 6. Right to Notice and Hearing — Statute Conferring Arbitrary Powers upon Judge. — A statute which expressly and unequivocally leaves it to the judge to say whether the alleged insane person shall have notice of the proceedings being taken against him before or during the examination on which he is found insane, and to say whether he shall or shall not be heard at all in his own behalf, is in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution and similar provisions in the state constitutions, forbidding that any person shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law.¹

An Act Which Purports to Confer upon Overseers of the Poor or any other officers the arbitrary and dangerous power of taking and confining in any place of their own choosing the body of any person in the county whom they in their judgment may deem insane, without any trial or other legal proceeding by which the fact can be judicially ascertained, is in derogation of the rights of civil liberty guaranteed by the constitution.²

7. Right to Institute Proceedings for Release. — A statute which provides that an insane person may be committed to an asylum by others and there held and detained without the right to initiate proceedings for his own release is unconstitutional and void because it violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which directs that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."³ But it is otherwise if he is entitled as a matter of right to institute judicial proceedings under the statute to determine the necessity and propriety of his confinement.⁴

8. Right to Jury Trial. — It has been held that no man can be deprived of his liberty without the judgment of his peers, and that it matters not whether the alleged cause of detention is insanity or crime.⁵ But on the other hand it has been held that an inquisition of lunacy is not within the purview of the constitutional guaranty of the right of trial by jury.⁶

Public Office — Insanity of Incumbent. — Where the statute provided for an inquiry into cases of alleged lunacy by jury trial, the action of the court in declaring a public office vacant because of the insanity of the officer, where this mode was not followed, was held to be unwarranted.⁷

Case, 3 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 218; Matter of Kings County Insane Asylum, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 7 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 425. See also People v. Osborn, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 663.

1. Constitutional Guaranty — Due Process — Unconstitutional Statute. — State v. Billings, 55 Minn. 473, 43 Am. St. Rep. 525.

A Statute Which Provides that the Court Shall, if Necessary, Issue a Warrant to apprehend an alleged insane person, is not in conflict with the constitution as authorizing the court to dispense with notice to the alleged lunatic and an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf, because it may not be necessary to arrest him in order to secure his constitutional rights. State v. Kilbourne, 68 Minn. 320.

Statute Not Requiring Notice or Appearance. — The constitutional provision that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," does not invalidate a statute which fails to require notice to a person or his appearance before he can lawfully be adjudged insane and restrained accordingly. Chavannes v. Priestley, 80 Iowa 316.

It should be observed, however, that this statute contemplates the presence in court of the person whose sanity is in question, in all cases except where upon inquiry it is made to appear that such presence would probably be injurious to him or dangerous to others. See the case last above cited, and see Black Hawk County v. Springer, 58 Iowa 417.

4. Le Donne, Petitioner, 173 Mass. 550; Dowdell, Petitioner, 169 Mass. 387, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290.

5. Jury Trial. — Com. v. Kirkbride, 2 Brews. (Pa.) 419. See also Bryce v. Graham, 2 Wils. & Sh. 481, 517; In re Crompe, L. R. 4 Ch. 653; Matter of Dey, 9 N. J. Eq. 181. See generally the title JURY AND JURY TRIAL.

6. Inquisition Not Within Constitutional Provision. — Matter of Ross, 38 La. Ann. 523; Gaston v. Babcock, 6 Wis. 503.

The constitutional provision guaranteeing the right of trial by jury applies only to criminal prosecutions or accusations for offenses against the criminal law where it is sought to punish the offender by fine or imprisonment. The inquest of lunacy is not a criminal proceeding, and is therefore not within such constitutional provision. Black Hawk County v. Springer, 58 Iowa 417; Matter of Bresee, 82 Iowa 573.

7. Missouri Statute — Public Office. — State v. Volume XVI.

9. Detention After Acquittal upon Criminal Charge. — In England it is provided by statute that if the jury acquits a person on trial for treason, murder, or felony, but finds specifically that he was insane at the time of doing the acts which would have been criminal had he been of sound mind, the court may order his detention in safe custody at the pleasure of the crown.¹ This statute, it seems, is applicable also in cases of misdemeanors of a grave character,² and at common law the crown had the power of detaining an insane defendant on a criminal charge until an inquest might be sworn to try the fact of his insanity.³

But in the United States it has been held that a statute which authorizes the confinement in a lunatic asylum of a person acquitted of crime on the ground of insanity, without giving to him the right to institute proceedings to secure his discharge, is unconstitutional and void.⁴

X. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST LUNATICS AND THEIR GUARDIANS — 1. Lunatic's Right to Sue — a. BEFORE INQUISITION — Early Rule. — It is said that there was a time when idiots, madmen, and such as were deaf and dumb naturally were disabled to sue, because they wanted reason and understanding;⁵ but Coke says that in his time they might all sue, though the suit should be in their name, but "followed by others,"⁶ and he adds that when an idiot sued or defended, he should not appear by guardian or prochein ami, or attorney, but "must be ever in person,"⁷ the meaning of which seems to be that he must first appear in proper person, after which some competent person was admitted as his next friend to prosecute or defend for him.⁸

Modern Rule — By Next Friend. — A lunatic or person non compos mentis, not having been adjudged so by inquisition, and having no legal committee or guardian, may sue in his own name by some competent person as his next friend.⁹

Distinction Between Law and Equity. — The original distinction between law and equity in this regard does not seem now to be much observed; yet there are some recent cases which hold that although idiots and lunatics may sue at law by next friend, they must sue in equity by the committees or guardians of their estates, duly appointed in lunacy, for the care and management of their property. *Covington v. Texas. — Denni v. Elliott, 60 Tex. 337.

Attachment. — The estate of a lunatic may necessaries furnished to him before or during the period of his derangement.¹

(2) After Inquisition — (a) Action at Law. — The facts that a person has been adjudged insane and that a committee of his person and estate has been appointed do not place him beyond the jurisdiction of a court of law.² And the appointment of a committee or guardian for an insane person does not prevent the creditors of such person from commencing suits against him to recover their debts.³

(b) Suit in Equity. — But a suit in equity cannot be maintained against a lunatic under guardianship to recover a debt overreached by the finding in lunacy. The creditor should bring an action at law, and the sum found due may be paid out of the funds belonging to the lunatic.⁴

b. ACTIONS AGAINST GUARDIAN — In General. — An action will not lie against the committee or guardian on a cause of action against the lunatic which accrued prior to the commencement of the guardianship.⁵ And generally where the committee or guardian is regarded as a mere curator without title to the property of the lunatic, his immunity from liability to an action is recognized by the courts, and the lunatic himself is the proper party to be sued.⁶

By Leave of Court. — In some jurisdictions, as for instance New York, the committee is considered an officer of the court, and no action is maintainable against him without leave of court first granted.⁷ But leave to sue the committee may be granted when the petitioner shows a cause upon which a court of equity would grant relief if the claim should be established in a court of law.⁸

3. Lunatic's Right to Allege His Own Insanity — Ancient Rule. — According to an early rule at common law, a person of full age who had been non compos be proceeded against by attachment, and he need not appear and defend by his next friend. Weber v. Weitling, 18 N. J. Eq. 441.

1. Action for Necessaries. — Bagster v. Portsmouth, 7 Dowl. & R. 614; Van Horn v. Hann, 39 N. J. L. 207.

And such action will lie against his personal representative after his death. Van Horn v. Hann, 39 N. J. L. 207.

2. Actions at Law After Inquisition. — Sternbergh v. Schoolcraft, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 153; Aldrich v. Williams, 12 Vt. 413.

It is not irregular at law to sue and recover a judgment against one who has been found by inquisition to be a lunatic. Dennis v. Dennis, 2 Saund. 328; Tyrrell v. Jenner, 3 M. & P. 648; Thorn v. Coward, 2 Sid. 124; Clarke v. Dunham, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 262.

A commission of lunacy will not protect the lunatic against an action; and a commission of bankruptcy is a species of action against which the lunacy is no defense. Anonymous, 13 Ves. Jr. 590.

It is no ground for setting aside proceedings at law that the defendant at the beginning of the action was incompetent to manage his affairs or has become so since. Cameron v. Portinger, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 11; Robertson v. Lain, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 649.

5. Against Committee. — Coombs v. Janvier, 31 N. J. L. 240.

An action will not lie against the committee for necessaries furnished to the lunatic before and during the period of his lunacy. Van Horn v. Hann, 39 N. J. L. 207.

An action at law cannot be maintained against a person in the character of committee or guardian of a lunatic without joining the lunatic as a party defendant. Rodgers v. Ellison, Meigs (Tenn.) 88.

In Illinois the conservator may be sued as the representative of the person for whom he is appointed, and upon judgment and execution against him all the property of the lunatic may be sold to pay his just debts that might be sold in other cases. Morgan v. Hoyt, 69 Ill. 489.

Effect of Leave Granted. — Permission to sue is not a determination that the petitioner has a good cause of action against the committee. Kent v. West, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 113.

8. Matter of Wing, 2 Han (N. Y.) 671.

The Jurisdiction to Determine the Necessity or Propriety of Charges and Expenses Incurred in the preservation or protection of a lunatic's interest or estate is of an equitable character and is to be based upon equitable principles, and such charges cannot be enforced by a common-law action against the committee. Kent v. West, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 113.

mentis would not be allowed to stultify himself and disable his own person by insisting on his insanity in avoidance of any act done by him while he was insane.¹ But though a deed, feoffment, or grant made by a man non compos mentis could not be avoided by himself, it could be avoided by his privies in blood or in representation.²

Modern Rule. — This rule, which was long criticised as mischievous and contrary to the dictates of natural justice,³ has been pretty thoroughly exploded, and the modern rule is that a contract made by a person who is so insane as to be incapable of understanding its effect is voidable at that person's option, unless the other contracting party did not know and had no means of knowing that he was of unsound mind;⁴ and under this rule it has been held that the lunacy of the defendant may be proved under a plea of non est factum.⁵ Though there are American cases in which the existence of the early English rule is clearly recognized, no case has been found in which that rule has been followed to the extent of depriving a party of the right to allege his own disability.⁶ The American courts have uniformly recognized the right of the party himself to rely upon and prove his own insanity as a means of avoiding any contract made by him during his insanity, as well at law as in equity.⁷

XI. QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT. — The General Rule is that the existence of insanity in a particular case is a question of fact to be decided by the jury.⁸

1. Ancient Rule as to Plea of Insanity by Lunatic. — Co. Litt. 246b; Beverley's Case, 4 Coke 123b; Thompson v. Leach, 1 Ld. Raym. 313; Stroud v. Marshall, Cro. Eliz. 398; Atty.-Gen. v. Parkhurst, 1 Ch. Cas. 113; Atty.-Gen. v. Woolrich, 1 Ch. Cas. 153; Bagster v. Portsmouth, 7 Dowl. & R. 614, 16 E. C. L. 304; Brown v. Jodrell, 3 C. & P. 30, 14 E. C. L. 196; Anonymous, Jenk. 40.

2. Rule as to Lunatic's Heirs. — Beverley's Case, 4 Coke 123b; Thompson v. Leach, 1 Ld. Raym. 315; Tourson's Case, 8 Coke 170; Anonymous, Jenk. 40.

The English authorities went no further than to estop a person from stultifying himself. The rule was never extended to the heirs, executors, or administrators. Woodbridge, C. J., in Lazell v. Pinnick, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 247, 4 Am. Dec. 722.

3. Fitzherbert, Indeed, Says It Was Not a Rule of the Common Law, and that the notion first made its appearance in the opinions of two of the judges in a case decided in the 35th year of the reign of Edw. III. Fitz. N. B. 202. See also Ridler v. Ridler, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 279, par. 5; Baxter v. Portsmouth, 2 C. & P. 178, 12 E. C. L. 79.

but that the legal effect of insanity, admitted or proved, is a question of law.¹

Contrary View. — There are cases, however, in which it is held that it is for the jury, under suitable instructions of the court, to find the existence of insanity and to determine its effects on the party's acts.²

Where Evidence Clearly Insufficient. — In civil cases the court should not submit the question of a party's sanity to the jury upon clearly insufficient evidence such as will not sustain a verdict.³

But Where There Is Conflicting Evidence on the subject, the jury must settle the question as one of fact.⁴

And in Courts of Chancery the question of a party's sanity may be submitted to a jury in like manner as other questions of fact.⁵

XII. PRESUMPTIONS — 1. Of Sanity. — Except in a few jurisdictions where the statutes have cast upon the proponent of a will the burden of showing testamentary capacity,⁶ the uniform rule, in both civil and criminal cases, is that all persons who have reached the age of discretion are presumed to be sane until the contrary is shown, and that the burden of proving insanity rests upon him who first alleges it, to the extent, at least, of rebutting such presumption.⁷

2. Of Continuance of Insanity — a. OF PERMANENT NATURE. — When habitual insanity in the mind of the person whose act is in question is once

7. This is the rule given by all the text-writers, and it will be found stated in some established, then the party who would take advantage of the fact of restoration to a sane condition or of an interval of reason must prove it, for insanity of that character is presumed to continue until the contrary is shown.¹

Need Not Show Complete Restoration. — But it is not necessary to show that the person has been restored to the full possession of his former mental vigor. The test of his capacity is the same as if he had never been insane, and a comparison of his present with his former mental strength can answer no useful purpose.²

To establish the basis of a presumption that insanity once shown to have existed continues to exist, it must appear to have been of such duration and character as to indicate the probability of its continuance, and not simply the possibility, or even probability, of its recurrence, as in case of temporary insanity. People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 49; New York Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Wiswell, 56 Kan. 765.

In Averall v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 672, it was held that where the evidence is that the accused was subject to occasional attacks of insanity, and was visited by such an attack shortly before the offense, and is not shown to have recovered sanity at the time of such offense, the presumption is that the insane condition continues as last established.

Pending an Appeal from a finding of lunacy, it is only prima facie evidence of insanity. Grimes v. Shaw, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 20.

An inquest of lunacy, although conclusive evidence of the condition of the party at the

And when the record of an inquisition is offered in evidence in another proceeding, its validity is not open to collateral attack.¹

b. TRANSACTIONS OVERREACHED BY FINDING. — So also where a transaction is overreached by the finding of the jury in lunacy proceedings, the inquisition is presumptive but not conclusive evidence of insanity at the time of such transaction.²

c. COMMITMENT TO ASYLUM. — It seems, however, that an order made on ex parte proceedings committing a person to a lunatic asylum is not admissible to prove such person's insanity where his contractual capacity is in issue.³ If, however, he was sent to an asylum after a regular trial of the question of his sanity, the record of that trial is competent evidence on the subject in a subsequent prosecution for crime.⁴

Records of Hospital. — And the official records of the hospital are competent evidence of the mental condition of a patient who has been confined in such institution.⁵

In Addison v. Dawson, 2 Vern. 678, a sale of land which was overreached by the finding of the lunacy of the vendor was set aside, but the conveyance was allowed to stand as security for what was really paid.

As to acts done by a lunatic before the issuing of the commission and which are overreached by the retrospective finding of the jury, the inquisition is only presumptive but not conclusive evidence of incapacity. L'Amoureux v. Crosby, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 427, 22 Am. Dec. 655; Wheeler v. State, 34 Ohio St. 396, 32 Am. Rep. 372; Lancaster County Nat. Bank v. Moore, 78 Pa. St. 407, 21 Am. Rep. 24.

3. Order of Commitment to Asylum. — In a writ of entry by a woman to recover land from one to whom she and her husband had given a deed of it, on the ground that her husband was insane, an order of the judge of probate committing the husband to the lunatic asylum is not admissible to prove his insanity, for the double reason that the issue before the judge of probate was not the same as that before the jury and that the parties were different. Leggare v. Clark, 111 Mass. 308.

The Fact that the Grantor Had Been Discharged from a Lunatic Asylum shortly before the execution of the deed is not of itself sufficient evidence of incapacity to avoid his conveyance. Knox v. Haug, 48 Minn. 58; Cropp v. Cropp, 88 Va. 753.

In Topeka Water-Supply Co. v. Root, 56 Kan. 187, the deed of a person who had been discharged from an asylum as cured was upheld, though she had been adjudged insane before being sent to the asylum and there had been no adjudication that she had been restored to reason before the execution of the deed.

4. On the Trial of an Indictment for Crime a record of a court finding a defendant insane and committing him to an asylum four years before the commission of the offense is admissible as evidence as tending to prove his insanity. Wheeler v. State, 34 Ohio St. 394, 32 Am. Rep. 372.

5. Hospital Records. — Townsend v. Pepperell, 99 Mass. 40.

2. Nature of Act under Consideration — a. CRIMINAL ACTS. — When the act undergoing judicial investigation involves the criminality of the actor, the terrible and atrocious nature of the act cannot stand as the proof itself or as an element of the proof of the perpetrator's insanity.¹

b. CIVIL ACTS. — Where the act is of a civil nature purely, it is competent to consider it in connection with the circumstances surrounding its commission and the other evidence in the case as tending to prove the sanity or insanity of the actor.²

c. SUICIDE. — It has often been contended that self-destruction can result only from a deranged mind, but it seems now to be settled that suicide is not per se even prima facie evidence of insanity.³ But the act itself should be taken into consideration in connection with the previous conduct of the felo de se in order to determine whether he was or was not in possession of his faculties.⁴ Suicide, it is said, is admissible evidence to show the absence of a sound and disposing mind in a testator.⁵ It has been held that on a trial for murder it is not permissible to prove that the mind of the deceased was unbalanced;⁶ and it has also been held that upon such a trial it is not permissible to prove that the deceased had threatened to commit suicide, unless such threat can be considered a dying declaration or a part of the res gestæ.¹ But in a recent case in Massachusetts, where there was nothing in evidence inconsistent with the theory of suicide, the court, after careful consideration of the question on both principle and authority, set aside a verdict against the defendant because the trial court excluded evidence that the deceased, on the day preceding her death, had expressed a determination to put an end to her life.²

Fact of Suicide Said to Remove Presumption of Sanity. — In Coffey v. Home L. Ins. Co., 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 314, it was said that the law does not presume that a person who has taken his own life was insane at the time; but that inasmuch as many, perhaps most, persons who destroy their own lives are insane at the time, the fact of suicide removes the presumption of sanity.

Where Insane Man Found Dead — Presumption. — And again it has been said that "the presumption of law that a sane man found dead has not committed suicide does not apply to the case of an insane man so found. * * * The presumption in the case of a sane man is based upon his sanity, and the fact of insanity being shown, the ground of the presumption is gone." Germain v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co., 26 Hun (N. Y.) 604.

3. Absence of Motive. — In criminal cases the absence of any apparent motive for the commission of the offense is a circumstance to be considered in connection with other evidence of insanity, but it does not of itself prove insanity.³

4. Declarations and Admissions — a. VERBAL STATEMENTS. — Declarations of a party expressing an intention to make a disposition of his property other than that which he did make are not admissible in evidence for the general purpose of avoiding his deed or will.⁴ But declarations of the party, whether made before or after the act in question, may be received in evidence if they throw any light on his mental condition at the time of the act, though they cannot be considered as proof of any other matter.⁵

See also the title RES GESTÆ.

In Stewart v. Redditt, 3 Md. 67, declarations of the grantor made after the execution of the deed were excluded though offered to prove insanity, on the ground that they might as well have been the fruits of well-conceived deceit as of a vacant mind.

Upon a Criminal Trial, where the defense is insanity, it is not competent to prove declarations made by the defendant to his physician as to his condition at a time prior to the declarations, nor are any such declarations the proper basis of a scientific opinion as to his mental condition at that time. People v. Hawkins, 109 N. Y. 408; People v. Strait, 148 N. Y. 566.

But this rule does not apply to a case where it is asserted that the defendant was continuously insane from a period several months before the commission of the crime up to and at the time of the trial. People v. Nino, 149 N. Y. 326.

It is held that declarations of a prisoner are not admissible to prove his insanity unless they form a part of the res gestæ or are a part of some conversation which is admitted in evi-

b. LETTERS AND DIARIES. — Letters written¹ or diaries kept² by one whose sanity is questioned may be received in evidence if they throw any light on the condition of his intellect at or near the time of the act which is undergoing investigation. But letters of third persons addressed to such a person are not of themselves any evidence of his mental condition, and are not admissible for that purpose unless connected by evidence with some act of the party done with reference to them and which the contents of the letters are admissible to explain.³

c. RECITALS IN WRITTEN INSTRUMENT. — A former deed or will executed by the party may be received in evidence to show the condition of his mind at or near the time of the transaction in question, but not for the purpose of proving its contents, or showing a different disposition of the property embraced.⁴ But a person whose sanity is in question cannot himself be compelled to disclose the contents of a will he has made.⁵

5. Particular Facts and Circumstances Tending to Show Mental Aberration —

a. GENERAL CONDUCT AND APPEARANCE. — The language, conduct, appearance, and general health of a person whose sanity is in question may be considered in connection with other circumstances in the case.⁶

b. IRRATIONAL ACTS AND BELIEFS. — In determining the mental capacity of a person, his substantial business transactions are of greater weight than his foolish sayings and doings unconnected with business;⁷ but his irrational acts and beliefs may be shown as circumstances to be considered and weighed by the jury in connection with the other evidence in the case.⁸ The defend-

Declarations of Agent. — Declarations of an agent that his principal was insane about the time when he executed the power of attorney under which the agent acted cannot be received in evidence. Bensell v. Chancellor, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 376, 34 Am. Dec. 561. See also the title ADMISSIONS, vol. 1, p. 670.

3. Letters of Third Persons Addressed to Party. — Wright v. Doe, 7 Ad. & El. 313, 34 E. C. L. 95; Waters v. Waters, 35, Md. 531. In the case first cited this question was discussed with great ability, first in the King's Bench and afterwards in the Exchequer Chamber, and in the same case on appeal in the House of Lords, reported in 5 Cl. & F. 670.

Prior Conveyance of Property Attempted to Be Devised. — "The fact that before the will was made the testator had conveyed to third persons some of the property disposed of in the will, was competent evidence for the contestants, as it tended to show the failure of the testator's memory, and thus bore on the question of his intellectual condition and capacity." Walker, J., in Fountain v. Brown, 38 Ala. 72.

The Fact that a Client Appeared Too Imbecile to Make Statements to His Counsel is admissible in evidence. Such statements, when made, are privileged, but the inability to make them is not. Daniel v. Daniel, 39 Pa. St. 191.

7. Irrational Acts and Beliefs. — Turner v. Hand, 3 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 88.

A Growing Neglect of One's Property is admissible as evidence of failing capacity. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 10 R. I. 538.

Nominating Notoriously Unfit Person as Executor. — That a testator, with knowledge of the fact, named a person of notoriously bad reputation as his executor, is admissible evidence to show want of capacity. McGinnis v. Kempsey, 27 Mich. 303.

8. The fact that a man "took a homely woman not quite right to church, and after-ant may prove not only irrational acts and conduct, but facts which may account for them and reveal an adequate cause for mental aberration.¹ But proof that a cause existed which might tend to produce insanity is not of itself sufficient.²

c. IRRITABILITY. — If a mild, quiet, amiable, and modest man should suddenly become irritable, harsh, suspicious, obscene, and profane, evidence of such a revolution of temperament and character would be admissible as tending to show mental derangement.³ But mere irritability of temper and excitability of disposition, without more, do not constitute insanity, nor are such peculiarities of themselves evidence of insanity.⁴

d. DEPRAVITY. — Depravity of character and abandoned habits are not of themselves evidence of insanity.⁵

e. IMPROVIDENT BARGAINS AND HABITS. — That a person makes an improvident bargain, or many improvident bargains, or that he is generally unthrifty in his business, or unsuccessful in one or many enterprises, does not, per se, prove him to be non compos mentis. These may coexist with a mind perfectly and legally sound. But such testimony is certainly admissible in connection with other facts and circumstances tending to show mental aberration. Shrewdness in trade and general success in business would go far to rebut inconclusive testimony of mental unsoundness. So improvidence and recklessness in trade would render much more satisfactory and convincing circumstantial evidence which tended to prove mental aberration.⁶

f. RELIGIOUS BELIEFS. — Evidence as to one's religious beliefs or opinions regarding the existence of rewards and punishments in a future state is not admissible to prove his insanity.⁷

g. BELIEF IN SPIRITUALISM. — A general belief in spiritualism is not evidence of a want of mental capacity.⁸ But an insane delusion that one's acts are directed by the spirit of some departed friend is quite another matter, and may be sufficient to avoid acts done under its influence.⁹

6. Expert and Opinion Evidence. — This phase of the subject has already received full treatment in this work.¹⁰

7. Books of Science. — There are cases in which counsel for the prisoner have ward said he would leave because she threatened him with a breach of promise suit," is a circumstance to be considered, but is not, in itself, sufficient to warrant the deduction of his insanity. Smith's Case, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 489.

That a white man believes himself to be the father of a child with woolly hair and the color and features of a mulatto, and whose mother is also white, is admissible evidence to show mental delusion on that subject, though he was lawfully married to the mother three years before the child was born. Florey v. Florey, 24 Ala. 247.

Insomnia and Nervous Restlessness, though inconclusive, may be proved as circumstances to be weighed by the jury. Boswell v. State, 63 Ala. 307, 35 Am. Rep. 20.

Extreme Hostility to One's Kindred which is without cause or is the result of delusion is admissible as evidence of testamentary incapacity. Brown v. Ward, 53 Md. 376, 36 Am. Rep. 422.

5. Depravity. — Hill v. Hill, 27 N. J. Eq. 214. In this case the court said: "That she became lost to shame, and in her lewdness disregarded her duty to her husband and her family, is not proof of an unsound mind, but of vicious tastes and inclinations too powerful to be controlled by the demands of duty or the restraints of society."

6. Improvident Habits. — 1 Beck's Med. Jur. 745; In re Carmichael, 36 Ala. 514; Henry v. Fine, 23 Ark. 417; Kenworthy v. Williams, 5 Ind. 375; Hall v. Hall, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 373; Noel v. Karper, 53 Pa. St. 97.

been allowed to read to the jury passages from standard works on medical jurisprudence in support of their theory of the mental condition of the accused;¹ but the better opinion is that excerpts from such works cannot be read to the jury as evidence or in the course of argument by counsel.² No evidence in the nature of parol testimony can properly pass to the jury, except under the sanction of an oath; and upon this ground books of science are excluded, notwithstanding the opinion of scientific men that they are books of authority and valuable as treatises. Scientific men are permitted to give their opinions as experts because they are given under oath, but the books which they write containing such opinions are, for the want of such oath, excluded.³

8. General Reputation and Family Tradition — a. TO PROVE HEREDITARY TAIN. — When it is desirable to prove the insanity of remote ancestors of the person whose sanity is directly in issue, it is sometimes difficult or impossible to find living witnesses who have personal knowledge of the fact. In one such case the court admitted evidence of family tradition to show the hereditary taint, on the principle that such evidence is admissible, when it is the best obtainable, to prove births, deaths, genealogies, etc.⁴ But this is open to the double objection of admitting hearsay evidence to prove a collateral fact, and it appears to be the better rule that such evidence is not admissible.⁵

b. TO PROVE INSANITY OF PARTY. — And there is certainly no authority or principle of the law of evidence which will admit proof, by mere reputation in the family, of insanity or other disease of the person whose mental condition is directly in issue.⁶ Neither is general reputation competent evidence of such person's mental condition.⁷

1. Books of Science. — State v. Hoyt, 46 Conn. 330; State v. West, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 371.

In Connecticut this rule is said to be confined exclusively to cases where the plea of insanity is interposed in behalf of one indicted or informed against for a criminal offense. In all other cases the rule laid down in Baldwin's Appeal, 44 Conn. 37, fully applies. See Richmond's Appeal, 59 Conn. 244.

In Reg. v. Crouch, 1 Cox C. C. 94, counsel for the prisoner, in his address to the jury, attempted to quote from a medical work the author's opinion on the subject of insanity, insisting that it was certainly done in M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & F. 200; but Alderson, B., refused to permit it, saying: "But for the noninterposition of the judge in that case, you would not probably have thought it necessary to make this struggle now."

In the trial of a criminal case, where the defense relied on is the insanity of the defendant, neither books of established reputation on the subject of insanity, whether written by medical men or lawyers, nor statistics of the increase of insanity as stated by the court or counsel on the trial of another case, can be read to the jury. Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray (Mass.) 337.

3. People v. Wheeler, 60 Cal. 587, 44 Am. Rep. 70; State v. O'Brien, 7 R. I. 338.

4. General Reputation and Family Tradition. — State v. Windsor, 5 Harr. (Del.) 512.

5. In State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89, evidence offered by the defendant to prove that his father was reported in the neighborhood to be at times insane was held inadmissible on the ground that insanity is a fact that cannot be proved by reputation.

In Walker v. State, 102 Ind. 507, the defendant offered to prove hereditary insanity in his family by family tradition, and it was held that the evidence was not admissible and was properly excluded by the trial court.

6. People v. Koerner, 154 N. Y. 355.

Family and neighborhood reputation is not admissible to prove that the prisoner was permanently injured in his mind by reason of a physical injury which he had received. Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 424.

Moore*, 78 Pa. St. 407, 21 Am. Rep. 24. See also People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 48. Neither are the letters and unsworn statements of his friends and relatives admis-

9. Proof of Hereditary Taint — a. INSANITY OF ANCESTORS. — Though it was once ruled that proof that other members of the same family have been decidedly insane is not admissible either in civil or criminal cases,¹ it is now allowable to prove the insanity of either parent, or even of a more remote ancestor, since it seems well established that insanity sometimes disappears in one generation and reappears in the next.²

b. INSANITY OF COLLATERAL KINDRED. — So the insanity of a brother or sister of the accused may be shown, and the jury may consider it in connection with other evidence bearing on the subject of the defendant's mental condition;³ and the same is true of the insanity of more remote collateral relatives of the person whose sanity is directly in question,⁴ though in such cases it should be made to appear that they are descended from a common stock which bears the hereditary taint.⁵

c. AS TO NATURE OF MALADY. — And it seems also that the insanity alleged should appear to be of a kind that may in its nature be hereditary.⁶

sible. Wright v. Doe, 1 Ad. & El. 3, 28 E. C. L. 11.

In Foster v. Brooks, 6 Ga. 292, the court said: "If reputation of insanity is competent, then reputation of sanity must be also. By this kind of evidence a fool may be proved a wise man and a philosopher a fool. Public opinion declared Copernicus a fool when he promulgated the planetary system, and Columbus a fool when he announced the sublime idea of a new world. Hazardous in the extreme would it be to the rights of parties under the law if they were allowed to depend upon the opinion of a neighborhood of the sanity of individuals."

State*, 5 Baxt. (Tenn.) 615.

4. Reg. v. Tucket, 1 Cox C. C. 103.

The insanity of an uncle or aunt of the person whose sanity is in issue is admissible in evidence. Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray (Mass.) 71; State v. Simms, 68 Mo. 305.

In a case in Massachusetts in 1868 the court admitted evidence of the insanity of collateral relatives of the defendant descended from a common ancestor three generations back. Trial of Andrews, pamphlet, p. 135, cited in 1 Whart. & St. Med. Jur., § 375.

5. In Missouri it is held that evidence of the insanity of a person's collateral kindred is not admissible unless it is shown that he is descended from that blood which bore the taint of insanity. State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217.

6. Nature of Malady as Hereditary. — Reg. v. Tucket, 1 Cox C. C. 103; State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89; Mecker v. Mecker, 75 Ill. 260.

In Reg. v. Oxford, 9 C. & P. 525, 38 E. C. L. 208, evidence was introduced tending to prove the insanity of the prisoner's grandfather; and Lord Denman instructed the jury that two points were to be considered; first, whether the grandfather was or was not insane, and second, whether his insanity, if it existed, was hereditary.

View that Insanity of Ancestors and That of Party Must Be of Same Kind. — In State v. Christmas, 6 Jones L. (51 N. Car.) 471, it was held that where hereditary insanity in the prisoner's family is offered in evidence for the defense, it must, in order to be admissible, be of the same character as that alleged to exist in the prisoner, and that the instances to be proved must have been notorious, so as to be capable of being established by general reputation.

This Case Seems to Be Supported by No Other Authority, and Mr. Wharton says that it cannot be sustained, as insanity rarely descends in the same common type, but varies in individuals. 1 Whart. Crim. Law, § 65; 1 Whart. & St. Med. Jur., § 376.

d. ADMITTED AS CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE. — Proof of hereditary insanity is admitted as cumulative evidence only, and the insanity of ancestors is of itself no defense.¹ Consequently proof of hereditary insanity in the prisoner's family is admissible after laying a foundation for its reception by the introduction of some evidence of the defendant's own insanity.² But it is not admissible until such foundation has been laid by an offer of some direct proof of insanity in the person whose mental condition is in issue.³

10. Competency of Evidence in Regard to Time — a. CONDITION AT TIME OF ACT IS POINT FOR DECISION. — In both civil and criminal cases the question for the jury to decide has reference to the mental condition of the person whose sanity is in issue at the very time of doing the act which is the subject of judicial investigation.⁴

b. EVIDENCE OF CONDITION BEFORE AND AFTER ACT ADMISSIBLE — (1) To Prove Insanity at Time of Act. — But in order to ascertain a person's mental condition at the time of the act in question, it is permissible to receive evidence of the condition of his mind for a reasonable period both before and after that time, especially where it is claimed that his disorder is of a continuing or permanent character, and this evidence should be considered by the jury in connection with the other facts and circumstances of the case.⁵

The Fact that the Insanity of the Defendant Has Become Fully Developed Since the Trial, assuming it to be true, does not authorize the appellate court to act upon evidence furnished by his present demented condition, and upon that ground reverse a judgment otherwise legal, when it may be true that, notwithstanding his present condition, the mental disease may not have so far progressed at the time of the homicide as to relieve the defendant from responsibility for his acts. (2) In Rebuttal. — And where a party has put in issue his sanity at a particular time, the other party may, in rebuttal, inquire into his condition before and after that time.¹

11. Requisite Degree of Proof in Criminal Cases — a. IN GENERAL — THREE VIEWS. — On this subject three distinct theories are held by courts and text-writers of the highest character, viz.: (1) The prisoner must prove his insanity beyond a reasonable doubt. (2) He must establish it by a preponderance of evidence. (3) He must raise a reasonable doubt as to his sanity.²

b. VIEW THAT ACCUSED MUST PROVE INSANITY BEYOND REASONABLE DOUBT. — The rule as laid down by the English adjudications and textbooks is that when the prisoner seeks to excuse himself upon the plea of insanity, it is for him to make it clear that he was insane at the time of committing the offense charged.³ And there has been some disposition on the part of American courts, in cases where the commission of the act was admitted or clearly proved, to regard the plea of insanity as in the nature of confession and avoidance and to require that it be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.⁴

On the Issue of Insanity in a Murder Trial, the prosecution may elicit from a competent witness evidence as to the mental condition of the defendant at the time of the trial, as bearing upon his condition at the time of the homicide. People v. Hoch, 150 N. Y. 292.

On a trial for murder, where the evidence to establish the defense of insanity is confined to a period not exceeding ten years before the killing, it is not admissible in rebuttal to prove that the defendant was sane at a period twenty years prior to the killing, if such evidence throws no light upon the crime. Green v. State, 59 Ark. 246.

Where the defense has introduced evidence tending to show insanity of long standing, the prosecution may in rebuttal ask a witness who is a neighbor of the defendant if he had ever heard of the defendant's insanity until after the homicide. *Merritt v. 4. In State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. L. 201, Chief Justice Hornblower instructed the jury that where it is admitted or clearly proved that the prisoner committed the act, but it is insisted that he was insane at the time, and the evidence leaves the question of insanity in doubt, "there the jury ought to find against him. For there the other presumption arises, namely, that every man is presumed sane until the contrary is clearly proved." Compare Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. (Mass.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458.

In Delaware it has been held that if the proof of insanity does not arise out of the evidence offered by the state, the prisoner must prove it to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt; otherwise the presumption of sanity or soundness of mind will remain un rebutted and in full force. State v. Pratt, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 249; State v. Danby, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 166; State v. West, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 371.

In State v. Thomas, Houst. Crim. Cas. (Del.) 511, however, it was held that if, upon a calm view and consideration of all the testimony, and regarding it alone, the jury has a reasonable doubt of the prisoner's capacity to know that he was doing wrong, he should be acquitted.

In Oregon the rule is statutory that when the

c. VIEW THAT ISSUE SHOULD BE DECIDED ACCORDING TO PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE. — Another rule supported by a long array of respectable authority is that the legal presumption that all men are of sane mind sustains the burden of proof, on the part of the prosecution, unless it is rebutted and overcome by satisfactory evidence to the contrary; and that in order to overcome this presumption of law and shield the defendant from legal responsibility, the burden is on him to prove to the satisfaction of the jury, by a fair preponderance of the evidence in the whole case, that at the time of committing the act complained of he was not of sane mind.¹ Under this rule it is not

Either the jury remains convinced of the prisoner's sanity by the legal presumption incumbent on the prosecution to prove the prisoner's sanity beyond all reasonable doubt, and a reasonable doubt arising from a consideration of all the evidence, either as to the fact of insanity or as to the causal connection between it and the criminal act, does not authorize an acquittal.¹

d. VIEW THAT PROSECUTION MUST PROVE SANITY BEYOND REASONABLE DOUBT. — The rule, however, which seems to be best supported by reason and perhaps by authority, and which is certainly growing in favor, is that the presumption that all men are sane until evidence of the contrary appears has fulfilled its mission when it has relieved the prosecution of the necessity of proving the prisoner's sanity in the first instance;² and if, in the progress of the trial, proof is adduced by either side tending to show the insanity of the accused, it then devolves on the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every element of the crime, including the sanity of the prisoner, because the legal presumption of his innocence ought to shield him from punishment unless it is clearly shown that he possessed sufficient reason to form a guilty intent.³

XIV. LIABILITY FOR CRIMES — 1. In General. — From the earliest period of the common law, no criminal responsibility could attach where the accused was so utterly deprived of reason as to be incapable of forming a guilty or criminal intent.¹ Thus far there is no difficulty. The discussion has been as to what degree of mental infirmity marks the dividing line between responsibility and irresponsibility where the party is not wholly insane.²

Delusions and Hallucinations. — When a person is under an insane delusion or hallucination, but is rational on other subjects, the rule is that he is not responsible criminally for acts committed under the influence of such delusion or hallucination, where the fact or state of facts existing in his imagination would, if actually existing, justify or excuse the act.³ But where the imaginary facts, if real, are not such as would justify or excuse the act, it is no defense that it was committed under an insane delusion.⁴ A mere belief on his part that his act is justified is not sufficient.⁵

Moral Insanity. — The same rule, in general, governs moral insanity as a defense in criminal cases; that is, if the defendant had sufficient mental capacity fully to comprehend the nature and consequences of an act and sufficient will power to overcome the impulse to commit crime, he is criminally responsible.⁶

An Irresistible or Uncontrollable Impulse may be a defense to an act committed under its influence, where it was the result of mental disease existing to so high a degree that for the time it overwhelmed reason, judgment, and conscience;⁷ but such defense cannot be sustained if the defendant knew the lar fact, such as his sanity. Hornish v. People, 142 Ill. 620.

2. Insane Persons and Children Compared. — The rule laid down by Lord Hale was that, since children under fourteen years of age are prima facie incapable of crime, imbeciles ought not to be held responsible criminally unless of capacity equal to ordinary children of that age. 1 Hale P. C. 30.

In State v. Richards, 39 Conn. 591, Seymour, J., recommended Lord Hale's rule to the jury, with the explanation that the child to be taken as the standard "ought not to be one who has had superior advantages of education, but should rather be one in humble life, with only ordinary training."

4. Imaginary Facts Not Constituting Defense if True. — People v. Hubert, 119 Cal. 216, holding that an insane delusion on the part of the defendant that his wife had put poison in his food, in consequence of which he killed her, was not a defense; People v. Taylor, 138 N. Y. 398, holding that a delusion in the mind of the defendant, a convict confined in the state prison, that the deceased was acting as a spy on him and had betrayed a plan of escape, did not affect the criminal nature of the act; Merritt v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 70; in which case, where it was shown that the defendant, charged with murder, had an insane delusion that a mob was after him to kill him, it was held error to exclude evidence that he regarded the deceased as the leader of the mob.

Rule in M'Naghten's Case. — But in 1843, in response to questions propounded by the House of Lords, the rule was restated by Lord Chief Justice Tindal as follows: "The jurors ought to be told in all cases that every man is to be presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction; and that to establish a defense on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong."³ This rule has been fol-

In Indiana the rule is broadly stated that a person may have sufficient mental capacity to know right from wrong, and to be able to comprehend the nature and consequences of his acts, and yet be not criminally responsible for his acts. In Missouri the court does not indorse the doctrine of "insane or uncontrollable impulse," under the influence of which a person committing homicide may be sane the instant before he strikes the fatal blow and sane the instant afterwards, but entirely non compos mentis at the instant of doing the act. *State v. Statutory Provisions. — In some jurisdictions the rule is statutory that an uncontrollable and insane impulse to commit crime, in the mind of one who is conscious of the nature and quality of the act or that it is wrong, is not allowed as a defense. State v. Scott, 41 Minn. 365; People v. Taylor, 138 N. Y. 398.

3. M'Naghten's Case. 10 Cl. & F. 200, 1 C. & K. 130, note, 47 E. C. L. 130, note. In this case M'Naghten, the defendant, was tried for killing Mr. Drummond, the private secretary of Sir Robert Peel, mistaking him for the premier himself. He was acquitted on the ground of insanity, and his acquittal caused so much excitement that the House of Lords propounded questions to all the judges, which drew forth the response stated in the text.

lowed in later English cases,¹ and is accepted in many American jurisdictions as laying down the correct test of the criminal responsibility of the accused.²

4. American Modification of Rule. — But in other jurisdictions the answer of the English judges has not been deemed entirely satisfactory, and the courts have settled down upon the question of knowledge of right and wrong as to the particular act charged, or rather of the capacity to know it, as the test of responsibility;³ or, as the rule is sometimes stated, the test of responsibility for criminal acts, where insanity is asserted, is the capacity of the accused to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of and with respect to the act which is the subject of inquiry.¹ And the question whether the accused knew the difference between right and wrong is no longer to be put generally, but in reference to the very act with which he is charged.²

5. Compared with Civil Responsibility. — It has been said that a greater degree of insanity is required to warrant the acquittal of one accused of crime than would suffice to invalidate a civil act or contract of the party;³ but on the other hand it has been held that the same test of capacity is applicable in both cases.⁴

6. Instruction as to Merits of Defense. — While the defense of insanity when satisfactorily proved is a good one, and should appeal to the humanity of an enlightened jury, yet it is sometimes resorted to where no other way of escaping punishment seems open to the accused, and it is not error for the trial court to admonish the jury that the evidence should be carefully considered lest an ingenious counterfeit of mental disorder should furnish immunity for guilt.⁵ But the court should not make any statements to the jury which are designed to cast discredit or suspicion on such defense made apparently in good faith.⁶

7. Irresponsibility Acquits — No Reduction of Degree of Crime. — Evidence of insanity sufficient to cause irresponsibility requires an acquittal and cannot have the effect of reducing the degree of murder.⁷

8. Insanity At or After Trial — a. PRISONER CANNOT BE TRIED OR PUNISHED. — A person indicted for crime cannot validly plead or be tried, sentenced, or executed while in a state of insanity,⁸ though in England he

In a recent case in New York it has been held reversible error for the judge to give to the jury as its instruction the rule in McNaghten's case, on the ground that it is calculated to mislead the jury in two very important points, namely, the amount of proof necessary to be given by the defendant to place the prosecution under the burden of proving sanity as an issue tendered by the indictment, and the effect of a reasonable doubt created in the minds of the jury by the evidence as to the insanity of the defendant. *People v. b. SEPARATE TRIAL OF ISSUE BY JURY DISCRETIONARY. — At common law a suggestion of insanity made after verdict and sentence did not give rise to an absolute right on the part of a convict to have such issue tried before the court and a jury, but addressed itself to the discretion of the judge.² So if, after a regular conviction and sentence, a suggestion of then existing insanity is made, it is not necessary, in order to constitute due process of law under the constitutional guaranty, that the question so presented shall be tried by a jury.³ And a defendant who alleges his insanity at the time of his arraignment is not entitled as a matter of legal right to have a separate, independent, and preliminary trial of that question by a jury specially impaneled for that purpose. If there is no apparent reason to suppose him insane, but on the contrary he appears to be quite capable of pleading to the indictment, there is no necessity for a preliminary trial, because every right to set up insanity, either when the offense was committed or at the time of the trial, still remains and can be thoroughly tried by the jury which is to try the indictment.⁴

In Georgia it is provided by statute that if the prisoner becomes insane after conviction and sentence to death, the sheriff of the county, with the concurrence and assistance of the ordinary thereof, shall summon a jury of twelve men to inquire under oath into such insanity; and it is held that this provision is sufficient to protect the prisoner's constitutional rights as to due process of law. *Nobles v. for crime, because he is not a free agent, capable of intelligent voluntary action, and therefore is incapable of a guilty intent; but in a civil action for an injury done to the person or property of another, the intent is generally immaterial, and the rule is that an insane person is liable for his torts the same as a sane person, except for those torts in which malice, and therefore intention, is a necessary ingredient.¹

2. Tortious Negligence. — In respect to this liability there is no distinction between torts of nonfeasance and of misfeasance, and consequently an insane person is liable for injuries caused by his tortious negligence.² Insane persons are held to this liability on the principle that where a loss must be borne by one of two innocent persons it shall be borne by him who occasioned it.³

3. Inevitable Accident. — The law, however, imposes no obligation on an insane person to perform impossible things, and therefore he is not liable for the consequences of an inevitable accident which no amount of prudence and care could have avoided.⁴

4. Liability for Compensatory Damages Only. — In such cases an insane person will be liable for actual damages resulting from the injury, but punitive or vindictive damages cannot be recovered.⁵

5. Slander — Exception to Rule. — Inasmuch as malice, actual or implied, is an element of slander, a person is not liable in damages therefor if at the time of speaking the defamatory words he was totally deranged,⁶ or was the victim of insane delusions on the subject to which the words related;⁷ and where the defendant was not totally deranged at the time of uttering the words complained of, he may nevertheless prove the unsound condition of his mind in mitigation of damages.⁸

In Withrow v. Smithson, 37 W. Va. 757, the court upheld a judgment for slander uttered by the defendant's wife, though it was claimed that the defendant was insane when the trial took place and when the judgment was rendered.

during the period of his insanity of performing any valid civil act requiring volition. And though he were afflicted only with insane delusion, or insanity on some particular subject, it was not deemed necessary to trace the act in question to the immediate influence of such delusion.¹ These cases proceeded on the assumption that insane delusions, as such, were to be proved by insanity, not insanity by delusions.²

Present Rule. — As a result of medical research on this subject it is now well understood that a man may be thoroughly insane on one subject and at the same time be quite capable of transacting business on all others, and in the light of this knowledge the law now recognizes the fact that there may be partial derangement and yet capacity to act on many subjects; and to avoid a man's act on the ground of insane delusion, it is necessary to show that the act under judicial consideration was the direct result of such delusion.³

The Test of Mental Capacity is whether the person possesses sufficient mind to understand, in a reasonable manner, the nature and effect of the act in which he is engaged;⁴ and in order to avoid a contract it must appear not only that

The reasoning of these cases seems to have reached the opposite extreme from the still earlier rule which forbade a man to stultify himself by alleging his own insanity and allowed his deed to be avoided only by his privies in blood or in representation. See Beverley's Case, 4 Coke 123*b*.

2. b. FOR LUNATIC'S FAMILY. — And the exception extends to necessities supplied to the lunatic's family.¹

c. AFTER INQUISITION. — An insane person, whether under guardianship or not, may be bound by his contract for necessities if it was made in good faith by the other party and under circumstances which justified the contract.² Whenever necessities are supplied to a person who by reason of disability cannot himself make a contract, the law implies an obligation on the part of such person to pay for such necessities out of his own property; and the rule applies to a lunatic, whether so found or not, when the necessities supplied are suitable to his position in life. But to justify the court in implying such obligation, the necessities must be supplied with the intention on the part of the person making the provision to be paid for them and to look to the lunatic's estate for his pay.³

4. After Adjudication of Insanity — Contracts Void. — After inquisition and adjudication of insanity and the appointment of a committee or guardian to an insane person, all his contracts, except for necessities, made while such adjudication and appointment remain in force, are void.⁴

Should the Guardian Be Derelict in Duty and fail to provide suitably for his ward, taking into account the means at his disposal, there is in law a clear remedy for such abuse, either by compelling the performance of the duty or by removing the unfaithful or incompetent trustee. And there is another remedy which the law furnishes ex necessitate. A neglected ward might be brought to want and suffering before judicial relief could be successfully invoked. In such case a stranger may supply pressing and present wants, and have his claim therefor made a charge against the trust fund in the hands of the guardian. But this principle finds neither justification nor field of operation unless the guardian neglects or refuses to supply the ward with necessities suitable to the latter's estate and condition. Although one non compos mentis cannot assent to a contract, yet the law raises an obligation on the part of a person benefited by the services of a lunatic to pay for such services; and upon this obligation an action may be maintained in the courts. Ashley v. Holman, 15 S. Car. 97.

Adjudication in Foreign Jurisdiction. — And it has been held that the rule is the same though the adjudication of insanity was made in another jurisdiction and was unknown to the other contracting party.¹

5. Equitable Relief. — The subject of equitable interference generally in the matter of the contracts of lunatics is discussed elsewhere in this work.² This subdivision will discuss the degree of mental weakness that will warrant the interposition of equity.

When Finding of Lunacy Would Not Be Justified. — A degree of imbecility below what is sufficient to justify a finding of lunacy under a commission de lunatico inquirendo may be sufficient to enable a court of equity to interfere to set aside a deed or other contract if it appears that undue advantage has been taken of that weakness, such as it is, to obtain the execution of the contract.³

Contracts made by those who have been adjudged insane are void, and those made by persons of unsound mind who have not been so adjudged are voidable only. Boyer v. Berryman, 123 Ind. 451; Copenrath v. Kienby, 83 Ind. 18; Crouse v. Holman, 19 Ind. 30; Fay v. Burditt, 81 Ind. 433, 42 Am. Rep. 142; McClain v. Davis, 77 Ind. 419; *Freed v. The Presumption of the continuance of the lunacy is conclusive as to all dealings with the lunatic after the inquisition and until it has been superseded. Carter v. Beckwith, 128 N. Y. 312.

No Evidence of a Lucid Interval is admissible to controvert the insanity of a person after he has been placed in ward, and non est factum may be pleaded to his deed and the special matter given in evidence. Rannells v. Gerner, 80 Mo. 474.

Those Who Have Notice of the adjudication of lunacy cannot, even with the consent of the guardian, trade with the ward without limitation. Coleman v. Farrar, 112 Mo. 54.

The Assent of the Guardian of an insane person to the latter's deed confers upon that instrument no element of validity. Rannells v. Gerner, 80 Mo. 474.

Restoration — Effect in Absence of Decree. — The adjudication of lunacy renders subsequent contracts by the lunatic invalid, whether he has or has not a guardian; and while it stands — that is, in the absence of a decree of restoration — it is conclusive, so that its effect on the contracts of the insane person cannot be overcome by proof that he has become capable of managing his own affairs. Kiehne v. Wessell, 53 Mo. App. 668.

When the Guardianship of an Insane Person Has Terminated, and a controversy has arisen between third parties, one of whom claims under a contract made with the ward after the termination of the guardianship, the reason ceases for regarding the decree of the Probate Court as conclusive on the question of the ward's sanity. Willwerth v. Leonard, 156 Mass. 277.

Commitment to Asylum. — But the fact that a person has been committed to a lunatic asylum under appropriate proceedings does not render his contracts void if there has been no inquisition and no committee of his person or estate has been appointed. Wagner v. Harriott, (N. Y. City Ct. Tr. T.) 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 283.

Where Consideration Grossly Inadequate. -- When it is shown that the mind of one of the contracting parties was enfeebled, and that he was suspiciously subjected to the influences of the other, to whom he transferred valuable rights or conveyed valuable property for a grossly inadequate consideration, the courts will require that it be made to appear affirmatively that the grantor understood the nature of his act and was not led to it by unfair influences.¹

When Party Cannot Be Adjudged Lunatic. -- When a person of weak mind has not been or cannot be adjudged a lunatic by the special tribunal provided by law for that purpose, and yet is so far incapacitated by disease, decrepitude, or other infirmity as to require the protection of a court of equity against the undue influence and fraud of others, a suit for that purpose may be brought by next friends in the name of such weak-minded person.²

Mere Weakness of Mind, or unsoundness to some degree, is not, however, sufficient to avoid a contract, in the absence of fraud, imposition, or undue influence.³

Many cases may arise in which the mind and memory are so far impaired as to afford grounds for setting aside an improvident agreement made by a person in that situation, upon a bill filed for that purpose, when the court would not have power to deprive him of the right to the possession and control of his property on the supposition that he was a person of unsound mind. Matter of Morgan, 7 Paige (N. Sanity Being the Normal Condition of the Human Mind, the onus of proving mental incapacity sufficient to avoid a contract is on the party who asserts it; and it is not sufficient to show mere weakness of intellect, not seriously impairing the reasoning faculties or the memory, nor indicating inability to understand the common business affairs of life. White v. Farley,

Old Age is not of itself sufficient evidence of incapacity to make a binding contract. It must be shown that the party at the time of the execution of the contract was afflicted with such a degree of mental weakness as rendered him incapable of understanding and protecting his own interests.¹

6. Who May Avoid Lunatic's Contract. — The insanity of one of the parties to a contract does not entitle the other to avoid the contract. The right to avoid is for the personal protection of the insane, and can be exercised only by the incompetent or his legal representative; the other party has no corresponding right.²

3. Insist. — A condition that the vendor shall be at liberty to rescind the contract if the purchaser should "show any objection, whether of title, conveyance, or otherwise," and should "insist thereon," was held not to authorize the vendor to rescind the contract without attempting to answer the requisitions, although some of them were untenable. It was held, also, that he was bound to answer them, and give to the purchaser an opportunity of either waiving or insisting upon them. Greaves v. Wilson, 25 Beav. 290. See also Masson v. Fletcher, L. R. 10 Eq. 212. In this latter case the word was "persist." See generally the title VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

I. DEFINITIONS. — The Term "Bankrupt" originally meant a trader who secreted himself or did certain other acts tending to defraud his creditors. It was distinguishable from "insolvent" in that a bankrupt must have been a trader, and the object of the proceedings against, not by, him. This distinction was preserved by the English bankruptcy acts until recent times, when it was practically abolished. In the United States the distinction is not generally regarded, and it seems to be settled that the word is used in the Constitution of the United States, not in the early English sense, but as commensurate with "insolvent." As used in the bankruptcy acts, "bankrupt" means a person who has done or suffered to be done some act which is by law declared to be an act of bankruptcy.¹

Insolvency. — As used in the insolvency and bankruptcy laws, especially when applied to traders or persons engaged in commercial pursuits, the term "insolvency" generally means the condition of a person who is unable to pay his debts as they become due in the ordinary course of business.² According

The General Abstract Definition of "Insolvency," as "inability to pay one's debts in the ordinary course of business," has reference to the usages of the trade or business in which the person is engaged, and of the place in which he is carrying it on. Daniels v. Palmer, 35 Minn. 349.

II. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY LAWS — 1. National Bankruptcy Laws — a. POWER TO ENACT. — The Constitution of the United States gives Congress power "to establish * * * uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States,"¹ and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying such power into execution.² This power is plenary, and is not limited to laws similar in scope to those which were in force in England at the time the Constitution was adopted.³

b. PROVISION FOR DISCHARGE IN VOLUNTARY PROCEEDINGS. — The first bankruptcy law enacted by Congress, following the then existing English statutes, provided for involuntary proceedings only, and did not authorize the institution of the proceedings by the debtor.⁴ The next Act of Congress on the subject, passed in 1841, provided for the discharge of bankrupts on their own petition,⁵ and this feature appears in both of the succeeding bankruptcy laws of 1867 and 1898, respectively.⁶ The constitutionality of this provision of the Act of 1841 was questioned on the ground that the Constitution contemplated only a law which would permit creditors to compel a debtor to apply his property to the payment of his debts, but the courts refused to adopt that view, and declared the provision in question constitutional and valid.⁷

c. PROVISION FOR DISCHARGE OF EXISTING DEBTS. — It is well settled that the provision of the bankrupt law for the discharge of the debtor from his obligations to creditors is valid as to debts contracted before the passage of the law, as well as those contracted afterwards, because the Constitution of the United States does not forbid Congress to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts.⁸ In this lies one of the chief differences between a bankrupt law passed by Congress and a state insolvency law.¹

Discharge of Liens. — Since Congress has power to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts, it follows that a bankruptcy law may annul any lien on the property of the bankrupt whether created by contract, judgment, or otherwise.²

d. UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION. — The provision of the Constitution of the United States giving the power to Congress to enact bankruptcy laws contains the requirement that such laws shall be uniform.³ By this it is meant that the law shall be general and uniform in its provisions; that is, that it shall not prescribe one law for one state or section, and a different law for another state or section.⁴ But the requirement of uniformity does not relate to the operation or working of the law in the different states or sections. This may, and often does, vary with the various circumstances and conditions existing in the different states.⁵

2. State Insolvency Laws — a. POWER OF STATES TO ENACT INSOLVENCY LAWS. — It was contended at one time that the clause of the Constitution, giving Congress power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy throughout the United States, operated to exclude the right of the states to legislate on the same subject, and it has been so held;⁶ but the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that there is no such exclusion, except where the power has actually been exercised by Congress; and the right of the states in this respect is now well established.⁷ It has even been held that such a law, passed by a state while a federal bankruptcy law is in force, is not on that account void, but that its operation is suspended until the repeal of the bankruptcy law.⁸ Of course such a law may be unconstitutional for other reasons, as where it authorizes the taking of property without due process of law, etc.⁹

4. Uniformity Explained. — Darling v. Berry, 13 Fed. Rep. 659; Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel, 95 Fed. Rep. 637.

The bankruptcy law of 1898 is not wanting in uniformity because it discriminates between corporations and natural persons in respect to the right to take the benefit of the law. Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel, 95 Fed. Rep. 637.

5. Uniformity of Operation in Different States Not Required. — An illustration of a law which may be uniform in its provisions, but operating differently in different states, is one which allows the debtor all the exemptions given by the law of the state in which he resides. Under such a provision it is obvious that the amount of exemptions allowable to a bankrupt will vary in the different states; but it is held that want of uniformity in this respect relates merely to the operation of the law, and therefore does not impair its validity. Darling v. Berry, 13 Fed. Rep. 659; In re Jordan, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 180, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,514. See also In re Smith, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 401, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,986; In re Jordan, 10 Nat. Bankr. b. CONSTITUTIONALITY AS TO EXISTING DEBTS. — The Constitution of the United States provides that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts.¹ Under this provision a state insolvency law which assumes to authorize the discharge of debtors without payment of their debts in full is void as to pre-existing contracts.² But the objection that the law is unconstitutional on this ground is waived if the creditor proves his claim in the insolvency proceeding and receives dividends on it, and he is estopped afterwards to raise such objection,³ and a discharge from a debt contracted before the enactment of the law is valid and operative, where such law supercedes a former law which was in force at the time the debt was contracted, and under which the debtor could have obtained a discharge.⁴

c. CONSTITUTIONALITY AS TO SUBSEQUENT DEBTS. — As to subsequent debts, that is, debts contracted after the passage of an insolvent law, it is clear that there is no impairment of the obligation of contracts, because every contract made in a state has relation to the existing law of the state which becomes a part of the contract.⁵

d. CONSTITUTIONALITY IN RESPECT TO NONRESIDENTS. — It is well settled that the insolvency laws of one state cannot be made applicable to Glover, 5 Gray (Mass.) 144, holding that an insolvent law is void if it authorizes the debtor's whole estate to be seized without a jury trial on the facts alleged. Compare Rider-Wallis Co. v. Fogo, 102 Wis. 536, citing 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. LAW (2d ed.) 305.

4. Debts Dischargeable under Prior Law. — Hundley v. Chaney, 65 Cal. 363, was an action brought in 1881 on a judgment rendered in 1876. The defendants set up a discharge from the debt in an insolvency proceeding under the Act of April 16, 1880. By this Act the Insolvency Law of 1852 was repealed, except so far as it was not in conflict with the later Act. The Act of 1880 authorized a discharge only in case the debtor was indebted to the amount of $300, while the Act of 1852 gave the right to any debtor, without regard to the amount of his indebtedness. It was held that the Act of 1880 was, in effect, a continuation of the Act of 1852, and that since the debtor had the right under the former law to be discharged from the debt, he also had such right under the later law, and that the discharge was valid. This case was afterwards followed in Pomeroy v. Gregory, 66 Cal. 574.

residents of other states,¹ though the statutes of any state, in the case of non-resident debtors having property therein, may subject such property to the provisions of the insolvency law, in order to secure an equitable distribution of it.²

III. OPERATION OF INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY LAWS — 1. Matters Occurring After Approval of Law but Before It Goes into Operation. — Each of the bankruptcy laws passed by Congress contains a provision fixing a day in the future when proceedings may be commenced under it.³ In consequence of these provisions the question has frequently arisen whether the act, in respects other than the institution of proceedings under it, operates from the time of its approval. The statute may be so clear and explicit in this particular, as to leave no room for construction, as was the case with the law of 1800.⁴

A General Provision that the statute shall take effect from and after a certain day is held to suspend its operations for all purposes until such day.⁵

But a Specification of Certain Particulars, in respect to which the statute is not to operate until a future time, is held to limit a suspension of its operation to such particulars and to leave the statute operative in other respects from the time of its approval.⁶

2. Rules of Construction — English Precedents in Federal Courts. — In construing the bankruptcy law of 1800, it was held that English decisions in bankruptcy cases were applicable, because that statute was based on the English statutes.⁷

2. Nonresident Debtors Having Property in the State. — Peabody v. Stetson, 88 Me. 273; Chipman v. Peabody, 88 Me. 282.

3. Operation of Law Postponed by Its Terms. — Act April 4, 1800 (2 U. S. Stat. at L. 19), § 1; Act August 19, 1841 (5 U. S. Stat. at L. 440), § 17; Act March 2, 1867 (14 U. S. Stat. at L. 517), § 50; Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 70.

4. Rule Under Bankruptcy Law of April 4, 1800. — The bankruptcy law of April 4, 1800, provided that "from and after the first day of June, then next, if any merchant should with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his creditors," do certain acts, he should be deemed and adjudged a bankrupt; and it was held that the statute expressly confined its operation to such acts committed after the first of June and did not include those committed between that day and the date of the approval of the law. M'Menomy v. Murray, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 435; M'Menomy v. Roosevelt, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 446.

5. Suspension of Operation Generally. — The bankruptcy law of August 19, 1841, § 17, provides that "this act shall take effect from and after the first day of February next," and under this provision it was held that the prohibition against preferential payments or transfers did not affect any such payment or transfer made before Feb. 1, 1842, though made in contemplation of bankruptcy and for the purpose of giving preferences. In re Chadwick, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,569; In re Horton, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,708; Weiner v. Farnum, 2 Pa. St. 146; Reigart v. Small, 2 Pa. St. 487. But see contra, Hutchins v. Taylor, 5 Law Rep. 289, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,953; Anonymous, 1 Pa. L. J. Rep. 121, 1 Pa. L. J. 326; Cornwell's Appeal, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 305.

6. Partial Suspension of Operation. — The bankruptcy law of March 2, 1867, § 50, declares that it "shall commence and take effect, as to the appointment of offices created thereby and the promulgation of rules and general orders, from and after the date of its approval; provided that no petition or other proceedings under this act shall be filed, received, or commenced before the first day of June, 1867." This clause was construed to mean that only the right to commence proceedings under it was suspended, and that in all other respects it went into operation at the date of its approval. Traders' Bank v. Campbell, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 87, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 353; In re Langley, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 559, 7 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 429, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,006; In re Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Biss. (U. No. 1,884; In re Wynne, Chase (U. S.) 227, 4 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 23, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,117.

The Act of 1898 contains a provision in this respect similar to that of the Act of 1867. It is as follows: "This Act shall go into full force and effect upon its passage; provided, however, that no petition for voluntary bankruptcy shall be filed within one month of the passage thereof, and no petition for involuntary bankruptcy shall be filed within four months of the passage thereof." Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 70; Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel, 95 Fed. Rep. 637; Harbaugh v. Costello, 184 Ill. 110, affirming 83 Ill. App. 29; E. C. Wescott Co. v. Berry, (N. H. 1899) 45 Atl. Rep. 352.

The act took effect on the first moment of the day of its approval (July 1, 1898). Leidigh Carriage Co. v. Stengel, 95 Fed. Rep. 637.

Federal and State Decisions. — A federal court, having before it a federal bankruptcy law for interpretation, is not bound by decisions of state courts under state laws containing similar provisions,¹ but a state court is bound by the decisions of the federal courts on the construction of such bankruptcy law.²

Bankruptcy Laws Are Remedial in their nature, and must be construed accordingly.³

3. Effect of Bankruptcy Law on State Insolvency Law — a. POWER OF STATE TO ENACT INSOLVENCY LAW. — Since the power of Congress over the subject of bankruptcies is not exclusive, and the states have power to enact laws on the subject in the absence of the exercise of the power by Congress,⁴ it logically follows that a state may enact an insolvency law while a federal bankruptcy law is in force, but, of course, such state law will remain inoperative until the repeal of the federal law.⁵

b. STATE LAWS SUSPENDED BY ENACTMENT OF FEDERAL LAW. — The enactment of a bankruptcy law by Congress suspends the operation of all state laws on the same subject,⁶ from the time it takes effect,⁷ as far as cases within the purview of the federal statute are concerned,⁸ and subject to such

The Common Law must be resorted to in construing the terms used in a bankruptcy law, and not in the local law of the state where the bankrupt is domiciled. Austill v. Crawford, 7 Ala. 335.

limitations as may be prescribed.¹ But it is only the operation of the state laws that is affected. The laws themselves continue to exist, and again go into operation on the repeal of the federal law, without being re-enacted,² and an act in contravention of the state law, though committed during such period of suspension, is sufficient to support a proceeding under the state law after the repeal of the national bankruptcy law.³ A state law so revived operates on an indebtedness contracted during the period of suspension, as well as an indebtedness contracted after the revival.⁴

c. PENDING PROCEEDINGS UNDER STATE LAWS. — Proceedings which are pending in a state court under a state law at the time a federal bankruptcy law goes into effect have been held under the former laws not to be affected thereby,⁵ and the present law expressly saves such proceedings.⁶

operate on property in a foreign jurisdiction, or on the claims of foreign creditors who did not in any way submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the court, and in this respect the insolvency laws of one of the United States are foreign as to the other states.¹ But proceedings had under such laws, so far as any matter of status is determined, are recognized as valid and binding everywhere.²

5. Repeal of Statutes. — The general rule as to the effect of the repeal of a remedial statute, without a saving clause in the repealing act, is that all pending proceedings fall within the statute.³ The acts of Congress repealing the bankruptcy laws contained saving clauses in favor of pending proceedings.⁴ Under the saving clause of the repealing act of Dec. 19, 1803, which related only to commissions of bankruptcy then pending, it was held that a criminal prosecution under the law repealed was barred.⁵ The saving clauses of the acts repealing the bankruptcy laws of 1841 and 1867 were more comprehensive, and included criminal prosecutions as well as bankruptcy proceedings.⁶

court from having any jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and for the purposes of bankruptcy jurisdiction may attach its district, or any part thereof, to the high court, or to any other county court or courts, and may, from time to time, revoke or vary any order so made; and the jurisdiction of the London bankruptcy court is transferred to the high court.¹

2. In United States—a. UNDER NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY LAWS.—The bankruptcy law of 1898 confers jurisdiction in bankruptcy on district courts of the United States in the several states, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the district courts of the several territories, and the United States courts in the Indian Territory and the district of Alaska.² It has been held that Congress has no power to confer on state courts jurisdiction in bankruptcy matters.³

Locality as Affecting Jurisdiction.—The bankruptcy law of 1898 confers jurisdiction on the courts within whose territorial limits the debtor has had his principal place of business, or resided, or had his domicile, for the preceding six months or the greater part thereof. In the case of a debtor not residing, domiciled, or doing business in the United States, jurisdiction is conferred on the court within whose territorial limits the debtor has property.⁴ The prior acts of 1867 and 1841 were to the same effect in this particular, except that there was no provision in regard to nonresident debtors.⁵

refused him, if, since such refusal, he has incurred new debts on which to base his petition;¹ or that he has made a fraudulent transfer of his property.²

(2) Character or Kind of Debts. — In order that a person may proceed to have himself adjudged a bankrupt, it is necessary that he should owe debts in the sense in which that word is used in the statutes.³

Fiduciary Debts. — Under the federal bankruptcy law of 1841, a debtor could not obtain an adjudication of bankruptcy on his own petition, if he owed any debts which were incurred while acting in a fiduciary capacity or as a public officer.⁴ By the Act of 1867 the fact that the debtor was indebted in a fiduciary or official capacity did not affect his right to obtain an adjudication of voluntary bankruptcy, but he was merely denied a discharge as to such debts,⁵ and this provision is contained in the existing bankruptcy law (Act July 1, 1898),⁶ and generally in the insolvency laws of the various states.⁷

(3) Character or Condition of Debtor. — Inasmuch as all insolvency and bankruptcy proceedings are wholly statutory, it is evident that no person has any right to the benefits thereof except those designated by the statutes.⁸

Partnerships, as such, are authorized by some of the statutes to make applications thereunder.⁹ The partners may, of course, apply separately, like any other individual debtors.¹⁰

Corporations are expressly excluded by the Act of 1898 from the right to become voluntary bankrupts.¹¹

Amount of Indebtedness. — Some of the statutes do not permit a debtor to become a voluntary bankrupt unless his indebtedness amounts to a certain sum.¹²

The North Carolina Statute, which uses the words "debtor" and "creditor" in reference to the persons who may be entitled to its provisions, is nevertheless construed to include persons who do not owe debts in a technical sense. Thus, one clause extends its benefits to every person taken or charged in execution of arrest for any debt or damages, and under this provision it is held that a defendant who is under arrest in an action for false imprisonment may apply for his discharge in insolvency. *Burgwyn v. 2. Involuntary Proceedings — a. IN GENERAL. — The statutes generally give the right to any creditor to petition for an adjudication of insolvency or bankruptcy against his debtor.¹ This right is not affected by the fact that the creditor has brought an action at law for the recovery of his debt.² But if he has assented to a general assignment made by the debtor for the benefit of creditors and has voluntarily become a party to it, he is estopped thereafter to institute a bankruptcy proceeding against the debtor on the ground that the assignment was an act of bankruptcy.³ And a creditor who has obtained a preference cannot institute the proceeding against the debtor, where the statute limits the right to creditors having provable claims, and provides that no one who has obtained a preference shall prove his claim until he shall have surrendered to the assignee all the property received.⁴

b. CHARACTER OR KIND OF DEBTS. — The general rule is that any provable debt will support an application by a creditor to have a debtor adjudged a bankrupt,⁵ provided that the petitioner's debt accrued before the commission of the act of bankruptcy alleged.⁶ Accordingly a creditor may proceed

c. NUMBER OF CREDITORS AND AMOUNT OF DEBTS. — In England a single creditor may file a petition in bankruptcy against his debtor, provided his debt amounts to fifty pounds, and if two or more creditors unite in the petition, their debts must aggregate that amount.⁶

In the United States, under the present federal bankruptcy law, the petition may be filed by three or more creditors who have provable claims amounting, in the aggregate, to five hundred dollars, or over; or, if all the creditors are less than twelve in number, then one of such creditors whose claim amounts to five hundred dollars may file the petition.⁷ The state laws vary somewhat

But the petitioning creditor need not have owned the debt at the date of the act of bankruptcy. Ex p. Thomas, 1 Atk. 73; Glaister v. Hewer, 7 T. R. 494.

But the statute now requires the petitioning creditor, if he holds security, either to state in his petition that he is willing to give up his security for the benefit of the creditors in the event of the debtor being adjudged a bankrupt or to give an estimate of the value of his security, in which case he may be admitted as a petitioning creditor to the extent of the bal-

Exempt Property need not be scheduled as assets. Sellers v. Bell, 94 Fed. Rep. 801, 2 Am. Bankr. Reg. 529.

Description of Assets. — In Pope v. Kirchner, 77 Cal. 152, it was held that, while a statement of debts due the insolvent, as "debts due petitioner, $274," was not an "accurate description" of the estate as required by the insolvency law, yet, the insolvency court having been satisfied with it, and having granted a discharge, the discharge would not be held void because of such inaccurate description. b. STATEMENT OF LIABILITIES. — The statutes also require the debtor to give a list of his creditors, showing their residences, if known, the amounts due each of them, the consideration thereof, and matters respecting the nature and extent of the liabilities.¹

c. VERIFICATION. — The debtor must verify his schedules, and usually no distinction is made in this respect between voluntary and involuntary proceedings,² though instances may be found where the statute requires verification only when the proceeding is instituted by the debtor.³

3. Omissions and Defects. — If the debtor, with fraudulent intent, omits from his inventory or schedule any item of assets or indebtedness which he should properly have inserted therein, the court may refuse to grant him a discharge, or, if a discharge is granted, it may afterwards be avoided because of such omission.⁴ But a discharge is not vitiated in consequence of any such omission, where there was no fraudulent intent.⁵

If a Debtor Falsely Schedules Debts Which Do Not Exist, it is a fraud on his creditors for which a discharge may be refused, or for which the discharge, if granted, may be set aside.⁶

The Right of the Trustee or Assignee to take and dispose of the property for the benefit of creditors is not affected by any omission from the schedule, as it is not the inventory that invests him with his right or title.⁷

Omitting Assets from the Inventory Unintentionally, or under an honest conviction that the item was worthless, does not vitiate the discharge. Demartin v. Demartin, 85 Cal. 76; Widmier's Case, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 81, 30 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 344; Oliver's Case, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 112.

The Omission of Names from the List of Creditors will not avoid the discharge, unless it was wilful and fraudulent, because the debtor apprehended opposition from the creditor or creditors omitted, or from some other motive. *Shepard v. Giving the Name of a Deceased Creditor instead of the name of his administrator will not avoid the discharge where such creditor's death was recent and was not known to the debtor. Wheeler v. Emmeluth, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 369, affirmed 125 N. Y. 750.

Debts Barred by Limitation. — In Pope v. Kirchner, 77 Cal. 152, it was held that the omission from the inventory of debts barred by the statute of limitations did not vitiate the discharge.

Insufficient Statement of One Debt. — In Devlin v. Cooper, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 188, affirmed 84 N. Y. 410, it was held that an inventory was sufficient to give jurisdiction, though one of the debts was probably insufficiently stated.

VII. HEARING AND DETERMINATION — 1. Defenses and Objections — Fraud — Collusion — Requisite Number or Amount of Creditors Wanting — Estoppel. — An adjudication may be opposed on the ground that there was fraud or collusion between the debtor and the petitioning creditor,¹ or that creditors to the requisite number and amount did not join in the petition,² or any matter that will operate as an estoppel against the petitioner.³

Petitioner in Fact Solvent. — But where the statute makes it an act of bankruptcy for a debtor to file a petition to have himself adjudged a bankrupt, it is held that the proceeding cannot be resisted on the ground that the debtor is in fact solvent.⁴

Giving Preferences, Concealing Property, and the doing of other acts by the debtor which the law forbids, though grounds for refusing to grant a discharge, cannot be set up as a defense to an adjudication.⁵

Solicitation by Debtor — Rescission — Compromise — Withdrawal of Some of the Petitioning Creditors. — It is no defense that creditors were induced to sign a petition at the solicitation of the debtor,⁶ or that the transaction constituting the act of bankruptcy alleged was afterwards rescinded,⁷ or that the petitioning creditors agreed to compromise their claims, but the composition was not paid,⁸ or that one of the petitioning creditors has withdrawn, leaving less than the number of petitioning creditors originally required.⁹

A Payment or Tender to the Petitioning Creditor of the amount of his claim has been held not to defeat the proceeding.¹⁰

If, however, the debtor refused to give his creditors proper information about his affairs, so that it could not be ascertained what number and amount of creditors were required to join, it is no defense that a sufficient number did not unite in the petition. Perin, etc., Mfg. c. EXAMINATION OF DEBTOR. — The bankruptcy and insolvency laws provide for the examination of the debtor in regard to his affairs and his property.²

4. Adjudication. — An adjudication in bankruptcy or insolvency is governed by the same principles in general as other judgments in regard to the operation and effect thereof.³ The debtor and all other persons who were parties to the proceeding are therefore concluded and cannot afterwards attack the adjudication collaterally unless it is void.⁴ But the conclusiveness of the adjudication is not limited to the parties to the proceeding, because it is held that a bankruptcy proceeding is in rem, and is conclusive as to all the world that the debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy for which he has been duly decreed a bankrupt.¹

Annulling or Setting Aside Adjudication. — Provision is generally made by the statutes for annulling or setting aside adjudications on designated grounds.² If the adjudication is void, it is held that a proceeding to annul or set it aside will not be entertained, because in that event the adjudication is of no effect whatever and the proceeding is unnecessary.³

VIII. WHO MAY BE ADJUDGED BANKRUPTS OR INSOLVENTS — 1. In General. — Formerly the English bankruptcy laws applied only to traders,⁴ and their policy was at first pursued in the United States,⁵ but the existing statutes, both in England and in the United States, extend to practically all persons.⁶

Who Are Traders. — A trader, within the meaning of the bankruptcy laws, is a person engaged in any business requiring the purchase of articles to be sold again in the same or an improved shape, and also many persons who do not come within this definition.⁷ The meaning of the term is not of the same

1. Bankruptcy Proceedings Considered Proceedings in Rem. — In re Wallace, Deady (U. S.) 433, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 134, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,094; Morse v. Cohannet Bank, 3 Story (U. S.) 391; Shawhan v. Wheritt, 7 How. (U. S.) 643.

This principle seems to be limited to the fixing of the status of the debtor as a bankrupt. A creditor who was not a party to the proceeding is not estopped to deny the acts of bankruptcy charged, so far as they affect him. In re Thomas, 11 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 330, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,891.

Mental Incapacity of Debtor. — An adjudication in an involuntary proceeding may be set aside at the instance of the debtor on the ground that he was non compos mentis at the time the alleged debts were contracted and the proceedings instituted. In re Murphy, 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 48, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,916.

5. The Bankruptcy Act of April 4, 1800 (2 U. S. Stat. at L. 19), the first one passed by Congress after the adoption of the Constitution, designated as the persons subject to its operation "any merchant * * * actually using the trade of merchandise, by buying or selling, in gross or by retail, or dealing in exchange, or as a banker, broker, factor, underwriter, or marine insurer."

The next Act passed August 19, 1841 (5 U. S. Stat. at L. 440), was limited to the same persons as those designated in the prior statute as to involuntary proceedings.

Provisions Peculiar to Traders. — One of the grounds on which a discharge may be refused is that the debtor, being a trader had failed

2. Condition of Debtor. — It is not necessary that the debtor should be insolvent before he may be adjudged a bankrupt. It is sufficient if he has committed an act of bankruptcy as defined by the statute.¹

Amount of Indebtedness. — The bankruptcy law of the United States permits an involuntary proceeding to be brought only in case the indebtedness amounts to one thousand dollars,² but there is not such limitation as to voluntary proceedings.³

3. Character of Debtor — a. ALIENS. — An alien may be adjudged a bankrupt.⁴

b. MARRIED WOMEN. — Inasmuch as traders only were subject to the earlier bankruptcy laws, a married woman could not be made a bankrupt, unless she were a trader.⁵ This condition could exist, at common law, under the custom of London,⁶ or where her husband was outlawed or convicted of felony, and not lawfully at large under any license.⁷ Recent legislation has made great changes in the law in this respect. In the first place, the bankruptcy laws are no longer limited to traders, but apply generally to all debtors; and in the second place the disabilities of married women have been removed by statute, so that in most jurisdictions they may carry on business separately and contract debts, and are subject to the bankruptcy laws, as if they were sole.⁸

c. INFANTS. — It has been considered doubtful whether an infant can be to keep proper books of account. See infra, this title, Discharge of Debtor — Opposition to Discharge — Failure to Keep, Concealment, or Destruction of Books of Account.

1. Insolvency Not Prerequisite to Adjudication.

George M. West Co. v. Lea, 19 U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 836; Blake v. Sawin, 10 Allen (Mass.) 340; O'Neil v. Glover, 5 Gray (Mass.) 144.

Married Women Subject to Bankruptcy in England. — The English statute provides that every married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole. 45 & 46 Vict., c. 75 (Married Women's Property Act 1882), § 1, subd. 5.

A married woman may be made bankrupt in respect of a debt incurred by her while carrying on a trade separately from her husband, though at the date of the act of bankruptcy on which the petition was founded she had ceased to trade. As long as any debts incurred by her while so trading remain unpaid she must be deemed to be still "carrying on a trade." In re Dagnall, (1896) 2 Q. B. 407, 65 L. J. Q.

made a bankrupt under any circumstances,¹ and there are many cases to the effect that he cannot.² It has been held, however, that an infant is subject to the bankruptcy laws in respect to such debts as he had the power to contract,³ or where he obtained credit and contracted debts by means of a false and fraudulent assertion that he was of age.⁴

d. LUNATICS. — While it has been held that a lunatic may be adjudged a bankrupt,⁵ there has always been more or less doubt about the matter,⁶ but it is well settled that a lunatic cannot commit an act of bankruptcy, at least, where an intent is involved, unless such act is committed during a lucid interval.⁷

b. WHAT CONSTITUTES PREFERENCE — (1) Nature of Act — (a) In General. — The statutory provisions in regard to preferences are very comprehensive, and include any and every device to which a debtor may resort, whether his conduct be active or passive, in order to put one or more of his creditors in a better position than the others.¹

(b) Payment of Money to Creditor. — It is a preference for an insolvent debtor, or one who is in contemplation of insolvency, to make a payment in money to a creditor, if the payment is made for the purpose of giving such creditor more than his pro rata share of the debtor's estate,² and the nature of the debt is Exchanging Firm Note for Note of Individual Partners. — A creditor of an insolvent firm, one member of which had more than enough property to pay all his individual debts, procured the partners to give their individual note in place of the firm note which the creditor held. It was held that this constituted a preference, because the creditor, by proving his claim against the individual estates of the partners, would obtain a larger dividend than the other firm creditors. Chadbourne v. Harding, 80 Me. 580.

The Dissolution of a Partnership and the Transfer to One Partner of All the Firm Assets and Liabilities is not necessarily an act of bankruptcy by the partnership, but it may be so, if it was intended to prefer an individual creditor over partnership creditors, or to put him on an equality with them, which could not have been if the partnership had continued. Ex p. Shouse, Crabbe (U. S.) 482, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,815.

Deposit with Creditor Bank. — An insolvent debtor, who was indebted to a bank of which he was a depositor, in order to give the bank a preference over other creditors, made a general deposit to his credit, and the bank thereupon charged the amount of its claim against the deposit. There was evidence that the bank knew that the depositor was insolvent. It was held that this was a preference within the meaning of the insolvency law, and that the debtor's assignee in insolvency was entitled to recover from the bank the amount so appropriated by it. Tripp v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 45 Minn. 383.

not ordinarily material;¹ but the payment of a percentage on some debts is not an act of bankruptcy, if the percentage to which the other creditors are entitled is not thereby diminished.²

Exception. — A payment of money to a creditor is expressly excepted by the statute of at least one state in declaring what acts of a debtor shall constitute a preference.³

(c) Transferring Property or Giving Security to Debtor — aa. GENERAL RULE. — A transfer of property made, or security given by the debtor to his creditor, either actively, as by means of a mortgage, pledge, etc., or passively, as by suffering the creditor to obtain a judicial lien, is a preference, if the debtor intended it for that purpose.⁴ But a mere executory agreement to transfer property to a

3. "Payment of a Just Debt in Money" not a Preference in Louisiana. — State Nat. Bank v. Monroe Cotton Press Co., 39 La. Ann. 834. But it was held in this case that where an insolvent debtor transfers to a creditor notes and accounts for a part of the debt and pays the balance in money, such transfer and payment are parts of one transaction, and the payment though of "a just debt in money" must fall with the transfer of the notes and accounts.

creditor is not an act of bankruptcy.¹ And it has been held that the transfer, etc., must be effective as such, and that if for any reason it is inoperative as between the parties, it does not constitute an act of bankruptcy.²

bb. ACTS DONE UNDER PREVIOUS AGREEMENT. — According to some authorities, a transfer made, or security given, though within the limit of time preceding the insolvency or bankruptcy proceedings, does not violate the statute, if it was pursuant to an agreement entered into before that time, but is regarded as having been made at the time of the agreement.³ Other authorities hold that where a statute declares void all conveyances, transfers, etc., by an insolvent debtor to his creditor within a certain time before proceedings are commenced against him, no exception can be made on the ground that the prohibited act was done pursuant to a previous agreement,⁴ unless the previous agreement contemplated immediate action, so as to bring the matter within the rule that equity will consider a thing done at the time when it ought to have been done.⁵

cc. DOCTRINE OF PRESSURE. — In England it was formerly held that, however desperate the circumstances of a debtor were, and though the creditor knew them to be desperate, the creditor was not debarred from pressing his debtor for payment, and if he did so press, and payment was made, such payment was not a fraudulent preference.¹ The tendency of some later decisions was to depart somewhat from this rule and disregard pressure unless the position of the debtor was such that the pressure might really influence him to make the payment,² and since fraudulent preferences have been defined by statute it has been held that in determining whether a transaction amounts to a fraudulent preference, the court ought to have regard merely to the statutory definition, and that, while the earlier decisions might be useful as a guide, the standards laid down in them should not be substituted for a statutory test.³

Canada. — The doctrine of pressure is recognized in Canada.⁴

In the United States it seems that the English doctrine of pressure has never obtained, and it is held not to change the nature or effect of a preference that it was given under the threats and coercion of a creditor.⁵

dd. EXCHANGE OF VALUES — Not a Preference. — An exchange of values between an insolvent debtor and one of his creditors does not constitute a preference, because in such case there is no diminution of the debtor's estate whereby creditors may be injured, and there is nothing, either in the language or the object of the law, which prevents a debtor from dealing with his property, selling or exchanging it at any time before bankruptcy proceedings are taken by or against him, provided that such dealing be conducted without any purpose to defraud or delay creditors, or to give a preference to any one.⁶

What Constitutes an Exchange. — Such an exchange of values occurs where the debtor substitutes for securities already in the hands of a creditor other securities of equal value;⁷ or where, at the time of obtaining loans or advances, or transfer was made pursuant to an agreement, entered into at the time the creditor loaned the money to the debtor, that in default of payment the creditor should have the option of purchasing at a fixed price from which the amount of the loan should be deducted, and it was held that a transfer of the property within four months before the bankruptcy of the debtor was valid.

buying property, he gives a mortgage or other security to the lender or seller;¹ or where he pays cash on a purchase.²

Raising Funds to Defray Expenses of Bankruptcy Proceedings. — On the same principle it is now well settled that it is permissible for the debtor to mortgage or sell property in order to raise the money necessary to defray his expenses in the bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding, including the compensation of his attorney,³ though it has been said that the debtor has no right to mortgage his property for such purpose.⁴

In Cases of a Mixed Character, that is, where security for a past debt is coupled with a further advance, it has been held that the transaction is not necessarily condemned merely because both parties knew that the debtor was insolvent. Such an act, it is said, may be and in fact often is the wisest course that a trader can take to promote the interest of his creditors, and the question in each case is whether there was an intent to prefer, or whether the debtor expected to escape bankruptcy.⁵

Wall. (U. S.) 360, 11 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 337; Cook v. Tullis, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 332, 9 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 433; Stevens v. Blanchard, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 169.

In St. Clair v. Cleveland, 83 Me. 559, the insolvent at the time of borrowing money gave the lender a receipt therefor reciting that he gave certain personal property as security. Some months afterwards he gave the lender his note for the amount borrowed with a chattel mortgage on the property referred to in the receipt. It was held that the chattel mortgage was only a renewal of the former instrument, and was not given "to secure a prior existing creditor," within the prohibition of the Utine statute.

There Must Be an Actual Exchange of Securities. — The replacing of securities already lost is not an exchange. It is the giving of new and further security, thereby diminishing the insolvent's estate to the extent of the new security. Morey v. Milliken, 86 Me. 464.

If Larger Security Be Given in the Exchange, the excess may be attacked as a preference. Hutchinson v. Murchie, 74 Me. 187.

(2) Time as Affecting Consequences of Act. — While any transfer, payment, etc., to his creditor, by a debtor who is insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, is declared a preference, still it is not available as an act of bankruptcy without regard to the time at which it was made; but, in order that it may have such effect, it is provided that it must have been made within a certain time, usually from two to six months before the commencement of proceedings by or against him.¹

(3) Circumstances of Debtor. — It is only where the debtor is insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency or bankruptcy that the statutes make it an act of bankruptcy for him to pay or secure one or more of his creditors without providing for the others; otherwise no debtor having several creditors could ever pay or give security to one or more, leaving others unpaid or unsecured, without rendering himself liable to bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings.²

1. Time as Affecting Consequences of Act. — The English statute provides that a creditor shall not be entitled to present a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor, unless the act of bankruptcy on which the petition is grounded occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition. 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 6.

The bankruptcy law of the United States requires the petition to be filed within four months after the commission of the act of bankruptcy, but provides that such time shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer or assignment, when the act consists of having made a transfer for the purpose of giving a preference, if by law such recording or registering is required or permitted, or if it is not from the date when the beneficiary takes notorious exclusive or continuous possession of the property, unless the petitioning creditors have received actual notice of such transfer. Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 3, par. b.

As to the rule in this particular under the state insolvency laws, see the various local statutes.

If a creditor enters judgment on a warrant of attorney within the time limited, and thereby obtains a preference, the statute applies, though the warrant was given before such time. In re Moyer, 93 Fed. Rep. 188.

The Time Is Computed from the commencement of the proceeding and not from the date of the appointment of the receiver or assignee. Beardslee v. Beaupre, 44 Minn. 1.

By the phrase "contemplation of bankruptcy" is meant having in view a state of bankruptcy or insolvency, or the commission of an act of bankruptcy or insolvency.¹ And the mere fact that a debtor, at the time of making a transfer as payment to a creditor, was unable to pay all his debts does not bring such act within the inhibition of the statute, if he does not afterwards become an insolvent within the time limited.² It has also been held that merely presenting a petition in bankruptcy or insolvency, without any intention of proceeding with it immediately, is not sufficient, if no action be taken thereon until the time limited has expired.³

(4) Intent to Create Preferences. — An intent on the part of the debtor to give a preference is generally necessary to constitute the act an act of bankruptcy.⁴

Evidence of Intent to Prefer. — Direct evidence of an intent to prefer is not necessary to prove that fact, but it may be inferred from the fact that a preference was given.¹ And it is generally provided by statute that any sale, transfer, etc., not in the usual course of business, shall be prima evidence of an intent to prefer.²

The Debtor May Testify as to what his intent was in making the transfer or payment.³

(5) Creditor's Knowledge as to Circumstances and Intent of Debtor. — In order that a preference may constitute an act of bankruptcy it is not necessary that the creditor should know that the debtor intended to give a preference or that he was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency,⁴ though such knowledge is material as affecting the right of the assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency to recover from the creditor the property or money received by him.⁵

3. Assignment for Benefit of Creditors. — An assignment for the benefit of creditors is generally declared an act of bankruptcy or insolvency, even though without preferences,⁶ and without regard to the question of the assignor's

Character of Stoppage or Suspension. — It is not only when the stoppage is fraudulent that it constitutes an act of bankruptcy. The meaning of the statute is that the act occurs when the debtor fraudulently stops payment, or when, without fraud, he suspends payment and does not resume payment within fourteen days. In re Cowles, 1 Nat. 9. Admitting Insolvency. — The English statute makes it an act of bankruptcy for the debtor to file in court a declaration of his inability to pay his debts or to present a petition in bankruptcy against himself.² In the United States it is an act of bankruptcy for a debtor to admit in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged bankrupt on that ground.³

X. DEBTS AND CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE — 1. Proof and Allowance — a. NECESSITY OF PROOF IN GENERAL. — It is obviously necessary to require creditors to present and prove their debts before they will be allowed to participate in the distribution of the estate, and in this respect creditors holding security stand on the same footing as unsecured creditors.⁴

b. BEFORE WHOM PROVABLE. — Claims are to be proved before the court or some officer as may be provided by the statute. In England the proof is made before the trustee, if one has been appointed, otherwise before the official receiver.⁵ In the United States the court or the referee receives the proofs.⁶

c. BY WHOM PROVABLE. — The English statute provides that a debt may be proved by delivering or sending through the post, in a prepaid letter, to the official receiver, or, if a trustee has been appointed, to the trustee, an affidavit verifying the debt. This affidavit may be made by the creditor himself or by some person authorized by or on behalf of the creditor. If made by a person so authorized it shall state his authority and means of knowledge.⁷

Proof Must Be Made by Creditor. — The debt must be due either at law or equity from the

The bankruptcy law of the United States provides that proof of claims shall consist of a statement under oath, in writing, signed by a creditor, setting forth the claim; the consideration therefor; what securities, if any, are held therefor; and what payments, if any, have been made thereon.¹

The Assignee of a Claim may prove it in a bankruptcy proceeding against the debtor, if the assignment was in good faith, though it was made after the proceeding was commenced.²

d. AMOUNT ALLOWABLE — (1) In General. — A creditor has the right to prove for the whole amount of the debt due him,³ and this amount must be determined in the mode prescribed by the statute.⁴ But it is only the debt which is due in equity that is provable.⁵

bankrupt to the person proving. Malcolm v. Fullarton, 2 T. R. 645. Thus the assignee of a debt assigned after the receiving order has been made could not prove, but merely had a right to call on the assignor to prove as trustee for him. Ex p. Dickinson, 2 Deac. & C. 520.

The Act of 1898 does not specify in what cases or how the proof shall be made by an agent or attorney, but the general orders and forms made by the Supreme Court of the United States, pursuant to the act, contained substantially the same requirements in this respect as the Act of 1867. See Rule 1 and Forms 35 and 36.

The Former Bankruptcy Law of the United States provided that any claim against the estate of a bankrupt must be verified by a deposition in writing on oath or solemn affirmation of the claimant testifying of his own knowledge, unless he was absent from the United States or prevented by some other good cause from testifying, in which case the demand might be verified by the attorney or authorized agent of the claimant testifying to the best of his knowledge, information and belief, and setting forth his means of knowledge. If a Debt Has Been Partly Paid by the principal debtor, so that the payment operates as an extinguishment of the debt, pro tanto, the creditor can prove only for the unpaid balance on the bankruptcy or insolvency either of such debtor or of one who is secondarily liable with him; ¹ but if the payment was made by one secondarily liable as indorser, surety, etc., the creditor may prove for the whole amount against the estate of the principal debtor, because the creditor in such a case is a trustee for the party who made the payment. ² If, however, the party secondarily liable, and by whom the payment was made, has released the principal debtor, the creditor can prove for only the unpaid balance of his claim. ³

Debts Payable in Futuro. — If a debt is not payable at the time the proceeding is commenced, it is not provable at its face value at that time, but is subject to a rebate of interest according to the time when it would have become payable. ⁴

Assigned Claims. — The assignee or pledgee of a claim against the debtor may prove for the full amount of the claim, though in the case of a pledgee he will be allowed dividends only to the extent of the debt for which he holds the security. ⁵

(2) Interest. — If the claim is one which draws interest, the creditor may prove for both principal and interest, ⁶ but if the debt is not interest-bearing

Forfeiture of Interest for Usury will be enforced in the bankruptcy court, when the debt is

and is not payable at the time of the adjudication, it can be proved only for the amount of principal less interest from the time of adjudication to the time the debt becomes payable.¹

(3) Set-off. — Where there have been mutual credits, mutual debts, or other mutual dealings between the debtor and any other person proving or claiming to prove a debt against him, the sum due from the one shall be set off against any sum due from the other, and an allowance made for the balance.² The right of set-off here rests on a somewhat different principle from the right of set-off between solvent parties. In the latter case the object in view is to prevent cross actions, while in bankruptcy and insolvency cases the object is to do substantial justice between the parties. This subject will be fully discussed in another part of this work.³

(4) Secured Claims. — A creditor, in making proof of his claim, is required to state whether or not he holds any security.⁴ If he holds any security, he may surrender it for the general benefit of the creditors, and prove for his whole debt,⁵ or he may retain his security and prove for the balance remaining after deducting the value thereof;⁶ and he may be required to exhaust

his security before pursuing his remedies against the bankrupt's estate,¹ unless a liability over against the estate would thereby be created.²

If a Secured Creditor Does Not Disclose the Security in making his proof, he thereby waives it, so far as the debt proved is concerned;³ but this rule is in the interest of equality in the distribution of the estate by the court of bankruptcy, and therefore the failure of the creditor proving his claim to disclose the security that he may hold for it, does not affect the right of such creditor as against a creditor who has not proved his claim,⁴ nor does the rule apply in the case of a claim which is secured on property belonging to a third person,⁵ ing the value of his security, is not founded in equity. Jervis v. Smith, (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 217.

Release of Lien for Consideration.—If a creditor, secured by a lien on the property of a third person, releases the lien for a consideration, he will be allowed only the balance after deducting the amount so paid. Seay v. Wilson, 9 Fed. Rep. 589.

2. Liability Created by Enforcing Security.—A creditor to whom had been given a policy of insurance on the debtor's life, payable to his wife, was allowed to prove his whole claim, without first resorting to the policy, because the rights of the wife were superior to those of the assignee in bankruptcy. In re Sauthoff, 7 Biss. or for which a third person is liable as guarantor, etc.¹ If the failure of a secured creditor to disclose his security occurs in ignorance of his rights and without any fraudulent intent, he may correct his mistake by amending his proof and setting up the security.²

e. TIME OF FILING CLAIMS. — The statutes provide that claims against the estate shall be filed within a certain time, generally computed from the appointment of the assignee or trustee,³ and if any creditor does not present his claim accordingly, he will not be permitted to participate in the distribution, until those creditors whose claims were duly filed and allowed have been paid in full.⁴

Extension of Time. — Where special circumstances exist, a creditor may be permitted to file his claim after the time limited.⁵

f. ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS. — The English statute provides that the trustee shall examine every proof and the ground of the claim, and admit or reject it in whole or in part, or require further evidence in support of it,⁶ but in the United States, as a general rule, it is a matter of course to allow claims filed with the proofs as required by law, unless objection is made by some party in interest.⁷

g. CONTEST OF CLAIMS. — The statutes generally authorize any party in interest to make objection to any claim, and leave it to the trustee or assignee to allow or reject the claim, with the right on the part of the objector or the claimant, as the case may be, to have the matter finally determined by the court.¹

h. EFFECT OF PROVING CLAIMS — (1) In General. — A creditor, by proving his claim in a bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding, submits to the jurisdiction of the court in which the proceeding is pending, and cannot pursue any remedy elsewhere.²

(2) Waiver of Lien or Security. — A secured creditor is held to waive his security, if he proves without disclosing it.³

(3) Right of Creditor to Sue. — A creditor, by proving his claim against the estate, waives his right to sue the debtor on the claim proved,⁴ but the waiver does not affect any debt not proved,⁵ or which would not be released by the discharge of the debtor,⁶ nor does it extend to any person other than the

which the word is used in the bankruptcy or insolvency laws.¹

Adequate Consideration. — Therefore a claim against a bankrupt estate, in order to come within this rule must rest on a sufficient consideration, — a matter which a court of bankruptcy as a court of equity will always inquire into, even though the claim has been reduced to judgment, because the object of the bankruptcy laws is to procure the distribution of a debtor's property among his just creditors, which object could easily be defeated if the consideration of a judgment should not be open to investigation.²

Fraud — Illegality. — And on the same principle, a claim is not provable in bankruptcy, if it arose out of any fraudulent transaction on the part of the claimant, or rests on an illegal consideration.³

As to contingent claims under insurance policies, see infra, this division of this section, Contingent and Unliquidated Claims.

Ante-nuptial Debts of Wife Provable Against Husband. — A husband is liable at common law for the ante-nuptial debts of his wife, and therefore such debts may be proved against his estate in bankruptcy, like any other debts due from him.¹ This rule, notwithstanding the modern legislation in regard to the rights and liabilities of married women, still obtains in some jurisdictions.²

Alimony. — There is some uncertainty in the decisions as to whether a claim under a decree for alimony is provable in bankruptcy. The decisions in England, and also those in the United States before the enactment of the bankruptcy law of 1898, are uniform in holding that instalments which had not accrued at the date of the receiving order (adjudication) are not provable, because there is no debt within the meaning of the bankruptcy law, but only an order or decree for the performance of the duty of a husband to support his wife.³ It was also held that arrears of alimony were governed by the same principle as future instalments;⁴ but in the leading English case on the subject it was said that arrears accruing before the date of the receiving order would seem to be provable as a debt due in pursuance of an order or judgment, though they do not constitute a debt at law.⁵ In cases arising under the present bankruptcy law of the United States (1898) there have been several decisions holding that the language of that statute is broad enough to include decrees for alimony as provable debts,⁶ though there are some decisions which adhere to the former rule.⁷

b. CLAIMS ACCRUING AFTER COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS. — The time of the accrual of claims, as affecting their provable character, is, of course, regulated by the statutes. The English statute declares provable all debts, etc., "to which the debtor is subject at the date of the receiving order."⁸ The bankruptcy law of the United States allows the proof of such claims only as are owing at the time of the filing of the petition.⁹

The Act of 1867, though somewhat uncertain in its provisions, was, by the weight of authority, held to allow the proof of such claims only as accrued before the petition was filed.

Rent and Other Periodical Payments. — In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that when any rent or other payment falls due at stated periods, and the bankruptcy occurs at any time other than one of those periods, the person entitled to the rent or payment may prove for a proportionate part thereof, up to the date of the bankruptcy, as if the rent or payment grew due from day to day.¹ Apart from such a provision, rent accruing after bankruptcy is not provable.²

Where brokers who were carrying on a margin for the debtor stocks which at the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed could have been sold at a profit, continued to hold the stocks for an unreasonable time and then sold without notice at a loss, their claim for the amount of the loss is one accruing after the bankruptcy, and therefore is not provable. In re Daniels, 6 Biss. Failure to Enforce a Judgment for Thirty Years is a ground for refusing to allow it on the bankruptcy of the judgment debtor, unless the proof shows sufficient reasons for the negrevived;¹ but the statute is suspended by the bankruptcy proceeding, and a claim not then barred is provable, though the period of limitation expired before proof was made.²

d. CONTINGENT AND UNLIQUIDATED CLAIMS. — In England all demands arising out of contract are provable, however unliquidated or uncertain the amount of the claim, including consequential damages and damages in cases where the amount has not and even cannot be ascertained by fixed rules, and this whether the breach has or has not or could not have occurred before the discharge of the debtor, the creditor being permitted to swear to a certain amount "and upwards."³ The former bankruptcy laws of the United States provided for the proof of contingent and unliquidated claims;⁴ but under these provisions it was held that a contract could not be proved as long as it remained uncertain whether it would ever give rise to an actual duty or liability, and the uncertainty could not be removed by any sort of calculation,⁵

Debt Barred by Foreign Lex Fori. — It is held in England that a foreign debt which is barred by the law of the foreign country, may nevertheless be provable in England, because it is the remedy only which is in question, and that must be determined by the law of the country where the bankruptcy takes place. *Ex p. or if there was no means of estimating the amount of the liability.¹ The present law provides for the proof and allowance of "unliquidated claims."² It does not, however, anywhere expressly mention "contingent" claims, but it would seem to have been intended that such claims should be provable, as under the former statutes.³

The State Insolvency Laws, in some instances, provide for the proof of contingent debts or liabilities, in accordance with the principles stated above,⁴ while others permit the proof of such debts only as are "absolutely due."⁵

Claims Arising Out of Torts. — An unliquidated claim for damages for a tort is not generally provable,⁶ though of course the statute may provide for the proof of such claims as well as others.⁷

Election Between Tort and Contract. — In cases where the claimant has, at law, an election of remedies between tort and contract, he may waive the tort and prove his claim as one for unliquidated damages for breach of contract,⁸ but if he elects to sue in tort he is bound by his election and cannot afterwards prove the claim in bankruptcy.⁹ The bankruptcy law of the United States of March 2, 1867, expressly provided that a claim for the conversion of personal property should be provable,¹ but this provision is not contained in the Act of 1898.²

Contingent Claims Seemingly Contemplated by Act of 1898. — Section 63, paragraph a, clause (4), provides that claims founded on a contract, express or implied, may be proved, and this would seem broad enough to cover the contingent debts; and the Supreme Court, in the rules made pursuant to the statute (rule xxi, 4) seemed to have so understood it by providing for the proof of contingent claims.

c. JOINT AND SEVERAL DEBTS. — In case several persons are liable for the same debt, and all of them are bankrupts, the creditor may prove his debt against the estate of each and receive dividends from all, until the debt is paid in full.³ If all the debtors are not bankrupts, the creditor may prove his debt against those who are bankrupts, and proceed at law against the other or others.⁴

In Case the Debtors Are Partners, and the firm is adjudged a bankrupt, partnership debts may, of course, be proved against the partnership estate.⁵ If the partners are individually adjudged bankrupts, such debts may be proved against their individual estates,⁶ and where one of the partners becomes individually liable for a debt of the firm, the creditor may prove against the estates of both the firm and the individual partner;⁷ but a claim against an individual partner is not provable against the partnership estate in bankruptcy, unless the statute provides for the settlement of such claims on the bankruptcy of the firm.⁸ So, too, a claim of a partnership against one of its members may

Under the Bankruptcy Law of 1867 the practice in some districts was to require secured creditors to prove their claims in all cases, and leave of the bankruptcy court was essential to the right of the creditor to enforce his security. Davis v. Anderson, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 145, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,623.

But it was afterwards held that the creditor might proceed to enforce his security without regard to the bankruptcy proceeding, unless the bankruptcy court should forbid him to do so. *Jerome v. The Present Bankruptcy Law of the United States provides that the value of securities held by secured creditors shall be determined by converting the same into money, according to the terms of the agreement under which they were delivered to the creditor or by such proceeding as the court may direct. Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 57.

The Failure of a Mortgagee to Prosecute His Foreclosure Suit after obtaining leave of court to foreclose does not preclude him from proving his claim, if he had a good reason for not prosecuting the foreclosure. In re Linforth, 87 Fed. Rep. 386.

Security on Property Transferred Before Insolvency. — The rule stated in the text applies where the property on which the debtor had given security was transferred by him before insolvency. Thus where the owner of land mortgaged it, subsequently conveyed his equity, and several years afterwards went into insolvency, the Massachusetts statute which provides for special proceedings where a creditor holds a mortgage of the debtor's estate, does not apply, and therefore the creditor may

g. JUDGMENTS. — A judgment entered in a civil proceeding is a provable debt, whether the recovery was on contract or tort,¹ but not a judgment in a criminal proceeding.² The creditor may, however, prove the original debt, notwithstanding the judgment.³

The fact that the judgment was rendered after commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding does not, according to the weight of authority, alter the case, if the recovery was for a debt which would have been provable without the judgment, because the judgment is not regarded as creating a new debt,⁴ though the contrary has been held.⁵ But a judgment for damages for a tort, rendered after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding, is not provable, though it was rendered on a verdict found previously.⁶

Interest and Costs may also be proved, where the judgment was rendered before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding.⁷

h. ASSIGNED CLAIMS. — A claim which has been assigned is provable in the hands of the assignee, whether the assignment was an absolute transfer, or was only intended as a pledge or collateral security for an indebtedness of the assignor to the assignee.⁸

i. PREFERRED CLAIMS. — In some jurisdictions a claim as to which the creditor has received a preference is not provable, at least until the creditor has surrendered his preference.⁹

j. COSTS AND EXPENSES — (1) Rule in England. — In England, it is held that costs incurred by a bankrupt before the adjudication are included in the comprehensive phrase "all debts and liabilities," which the statute declares are provable in bankruptcy.¹

A Successful Plaintiff, whose cause of action was a provable debt, may prove his costs on the bankruptcy of the defendant as an addition to the original claim, if he (the plaintiff) obtained a verdict before the bankruptcy; but the rule is different, if the verdict was obtained after the bankruptcy.² If, however, the claim sued on was not a provable debt, the plaintiff is not entitled to prove his costs merely by reason of the fact that he had a verdict before the bankruptcy. The judgment must also have been signed.³

In the Case of a Successful Defendant, the right to prove costs on the bankruptcy of the plaintiff rests on the theory that a defendant's costs are not an incident to any other debt, but the liability therefor is created by the verdict or judgment, and therefore the defendant may prove his costs, if he obtained a verdict or judgment before the bankruptcy, though the costs had not been taxed or the judgment signed, and it is also immaterial whether the action was in contract or in tort.⁴

(2) Rule in United States. — When a judgment for costs has been perfected before bankruptcy proceedings are commenced, such costs are obviously provable as a debt or liability incurred before the bankruptcy.⁵ Express provision for costs is made by the bankruptcy law of 1898.⁶

Costs and Expenses of Attachments and Executions. — Where an attachment or execution was levied in good faith on the property of a debtor before his bankruptcy, the fees and disbursements of the officer making the levy may be proved;⁷ but they are not provable if the execution was issued after the Debts Due the United States have priority over all the other debts of the bankrupt.²

Debts Due a State are also given priority by the provision referred to above in connection with debts due the United States.³

tion of debts entitled to priority does not name debts due the crown, other than taxes, and it declares that the provisions relating to the priorities of debts shall bind the crown. 51 & 52 Vict., c. 62, § 1; 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 150.

1. Rule as to Rates and Taxes in England. — 51 & 52 Vict., c. 62, § 1, par. (a).

2. Debts Due United States. — The bankruptcy law of the United States (Act July 1, 1893, § 64, par. a) provides that all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States shall be first paid, but no mention is made of other debts due the United States. This provision, however, is to be read in connection with paragraph b (5) of the same section, regulating the case of "debts owing to any person who, by the laws of the states of the United States, is entitled to priority," and an earlier statute (Rev. Stat. U. S., § 3466) which declares that whenever any person indebted to the United States is insolvent the debts due the United States shall be first satisfied. And see In re Tilden, 91 Fed. Rep. 500.

The Bankruptcy Law of 1867 provided that "whenever any person indebted to the United States is insolvent, or whenever the estate of any deceased debtor in the hands of the executors or administrators is insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debts due to the United States shall be first satisfied." *Cook County Nat. What Are Debts Due United States. — The following have been held to be debts due the United States which are entitled to priority: A claim for a forfeiture because of undervaluation of goods entered at the custom-house (In re Vetterlein, 20 Fed. Rep. 109); money due for customs duties (In re Kirkland, 2 Hughes (U. S.) 208, 14 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 139, 157, 14 Fed. Cas. Nos. 7,843, 7,844; the liability of an indorser of a bill of exchange held by the United States (U. S. v. Fisher, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 358, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,720); penalties incurred by violating the internal revenue laws (Matter of Rosey, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 507, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 509, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,066).

Equitable Debts, as well as those of a legal nature, due the United States are entitled to priority. Howe v. Sheppard, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 135, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,772.

Priority Subject to Pre-existing Liens. — The right of priority given to debts due the United States does not partake of the nature of a lien, and, therefore, does not operate to prefer such debts to others secured by valid liens. U. S. v. Hooe, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 73; Phillips v. The Ship Thomas Scattergood, Gilp. (U. S.) 1, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,706; U. S. v. Mechanics' Bank, Gilp. (U. S.) 51, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,756.

Substitution to Priority of United States. — A purchaser of imported goods who is compelled to pay the customs duties, which the importer was to pay, is entitled to be substituted to the priority of the United States on the bankruptcy of the importer. In re Kirkland, 2 Hughes (U. S.) 208, 14 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 139, 157, 14 Fed. Cas. Nos. 7,843, 7,844.

And so, too, a revenue officer who pays to the government the amount of a dishonored check received by him from a government debtor will be subrogated to the rights of the government, because by accepting such check, he becomes a guarantor of its payment. In re McBride, 19 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 452, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,662.

But where a deputy collector of internal revenue deposits in bank money collected by him as such, and the bank afterwards goes into bankruptcy, the collector by whom such deputy was appointed is not entitled to priority as to such deposit. He is not the guarantor of a debt due from the bank to the government. Wilkinson v. Babbitt, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 207, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,668.

Taxes Due to a State, County, District, or Municipality are named by the bankruptcy law in the clause giving priority to taxes due the United States,¹ and similar provisions are usually, if not invariably, contained in the insolvency laws of the states.²

c. COSTS AND EXPENSES. — The costs and expenses of the proceedings are also given priority by the statutes.³ These include the actual and necessary cost of preserving the estate after the filing of the petition,⁴ the filing fees paid by creditors in involuntary cases,⁵ and the cost of administration.⁶

Costs of Attachments pending at the time an insolvency or bankruptcy proceeding was commenced, and vacated by such proceeding because the writs of attachment were sued out within a limited time before the commencement of the proceeding, are given priority in some jurisdictions.⁷

d. WAGES OR SALARIES OF LABORERS, CLERKS, ETC. — The English Statute gives priority to all wages or salaries of any clerk or servant in respect of services rendered to the bankrupt during four months before the date of the receiving order, not exceeding fifty pounds; and all wages of any laborer or workman, not exceeding twenty-five pounds, in respect of services rendered to the bankrupt during two months before the date of the receiving order.¹

In Canada, also, priority is given to claims for wages.²

In the United States "wages due to workmen, clerks, or servants, which have been earned within three months before the date of the commencement of the proceedings, not to exceed three hundred dollars to each claimant," are given priority by the national bankruptcy law,³ and similar provisions are contained in the insolvency laws of the several states.⁴

Nature and Extent of Right. — In order that a claim may have priority under this provision of the statute, it must be a claim for "wages" or "salary" ⁵ accruing to some person who is within one of the classes enumerated by the statute.⁶ The right of priority is not limited, however, to claims in the hands

c. CLAIMS GIVEN PRIORITY BY STATE LAWS. — The present bankruptcy law of the United States provides that among the debts entitled to priority under it shall be "debts owing to any person who by the laws of the states * * * shall be entitled to priority."³

XI. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

— 1. Exemption of Debtor from Arrest on Civil Process. — The present bankruptcy law of the United States provides that a debtor shall be exempt from arrest on civil process, except (1) when issued from a court of bankruptcy for contempt or disobedience of its lawful order, or (2) when issued from a state court having jurisdiction, on a debt or claim from which a discharge in bankruptcy would not be a release. Substantially the same provision was also contained in the Act of 1867.⁴ It will be observed that this provision only (Pa.) 140. Nor is he an 'operative' within the Ohio statute. Matter of Sloan, 60 Ohio St. 472; Davis v. Greenlee, 13 Ohio Cir. Ct. 229, 7 Ohio Cir. Dec. 111. Or a "workman," etc., within the bankruptcy law of the United States. In re Greenwald, 99 Fed. Rep. 705.

An Attorney at Law is not a clerk, servant, or employee within the Maryland statute. Lewis v. Fisher, 80 Md. 139, 45 Am. St. Rep. 327.

Typesetters and others employed in a printing establishment are "laborers." Heckman v. Tammen, 184 Ill. 144, affirming 84 Ill. App. 537.

A Piece Worker who receives materials from the shop of his employer and takes them to his own shop and there manufactures them, at certain prices, and delivers the manufactured product to the employer, is an "operative" within the Massachusetts statute. Thayer v. Mann, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 371.

A Loan to Pay the Wages of Employees does not give the lender a claim for wages, so as to entitle him to priority. In re Paulson, Betts' Scr. Bk. 75, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,849.

The Drawee of an Order for a Sum Due as Wages does not, on payment of the order to the employee, become the assignee of the employee's claim, or entitled to stand in his shoes by substitution. His claim accrues directly against the employer, and therefore is not entitled to priority. Matter of Erie Rolling Mill Co., 1 Fed. Rep. 585.

1. Assignee of Claim for Wages Held Entitled to Priority. — In re Brown, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,973a, 4 Ben. (U. S.) 142, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 720, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,974. But see contra, under the Illinois statute, Beifeld v. International Cement Co., 79 Ill. App. 318.

Under the bankruptcy law of 1898, giving priority of payment to "wages due to workmen," etc., and limiting the amount to three hundred dollars, it is held that an assignee of a claim for wages is not entitled to priority. In re Westlund, 99 Fed. Rep. 399.

2. The Father of an Infant has a preferred claim for the services of the infant. In re Harthorn, 4 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 103, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,162.

3. Priority under State Laws Preserved by Bankruptcy Law. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 64, par. b (5); In re Tilden, 91 Fed. Rep. 500; In re Camp, 91 Fed. Rep. 745; In re Wright, 95 Fed. Rep. 807; In re Byrne, 97 Fed.

Rep. 762; In re Goldstein, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 603; In re Falls City Shirt Mfg. Co., 98 Fed. Rep. 592; In re Lewis, 99 Fed. Rep. 935.

The bankruptcy law of 1867 did not contain this provision. See Matter of Stuyvesant Bank, (U. S. Dist. Ct.) 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 133, 12 Blatchf. (U. S.) 179, 10 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 399, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,919.

4. Exemption of Bankrupt from Arrest on Civil Process. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 9, par. a; Act March 2, 1867 (14 U. S. Stat. at L. 517), § 26; In re Borst, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 171, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,665; Re Devoe, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 251, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 27, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,843; Ex p. Taylor, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 617, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 40, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,773; Matter of Smith, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 494, 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 24, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,976; Matter of Goldstein, (U. S. Dist. Ct.) 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 426, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,523; In re Lewensohn, 99 Fed. Rep. 73.

A Judgment for a Tort is a debt in the sense in which that word is used in the statute. In re Wiggers, 2 Biss. (U. S.) 71, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,623.

No Exemption from Arrest for Debts Not Released by Discharge. — Matter of Patterson, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 155, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 307, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,817; Matter of Kimball, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 554, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 204, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,768, affirmed 6 Blatchf. (U. S.) 292, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 354, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,769; Re Devoe, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 251, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 27, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,843; Whitehouse, Petitioner, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 429, 4 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 63, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,564; In re Pettis, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 44, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,046; In re Pitts, 19 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 63, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,190.

As to what debts are released by a discharge in bankruptcy, see infra, this title, Discharge of Debtor — Effect of Discharge.

Even though a Debt Is Provable in Bankruptcy, the debtor may be arrested, if a discharge in bankruptcy will not release the debt. Matter of Seymour, 1 Ben. (U. S.) 348, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 29, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,684; Matter of Glaser, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 180, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 336, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,474; In re Alsberg, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 116, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 261.

As to the Rule under the Earlier Statutes, see (Act 1841) In re Cheney, 5 Law Rep. 19, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,636; In re Comstock, 22 Vt. 642, 5 Law Rep. 163, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,073; relieves the debtor from liability to be arrested after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding, and does not affect any arrest made before that time,¹ and the rule is the same, in this respect, under some of the state insolvency laws.²

The Remedy of a debtor who is arrested in violation of his right of exemption is by an application to the district court of the United States for an order directing his discharge,³ or that court may bring him up on habeas corpus and discharge him.⁴

2. Control of Property — a. IN GENERAL. — A bankrupt, during the pendency of the proceeding, is said to be, in a sense, civiliter mortuus,⁵ and his property is not subject to seizure under process issued in an action against him,⁶ nor has he any right to dispose of any of his property after the filing of the petition, in voluntary proceedings, or after the adjudication, when the proceeding is involuntary;⁷ but it seems that such a transfer is merely void-

Extent of Inquiry on Habeas Corpus. — On habeas corpus by a bankrupt who has been arrested on an order issued by a state court, the bankruptcy court can only inquire whether the papers on which the order of arrest was granted show on their face that the debt was one which would not be released by a discharge in bankruptcy. Matter of Valk, 3 Ben. Under the Massachusetts statute the insolvent's control over his property is terminated, not by the mere filing of the petition in a voluntary proceeding, but by the first publication of the notice of issuing the warrant. King v. Cross, 20 U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep. 131, affirming 19 R. I. 220.

Perishable Property. — A bankrupt has no right to sell even perishable property without leave of court, after he has filed his petition. In re Pryor, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 262, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,457.

Negotiable Notes. — The general rule as to the effect of transfers of negotiable paper to bona fide purchasers for value and without notice is not applicable where a bankrupt, after the adjudication, transfers bills or notes held by him, because all the world must take notice of the pending proceeding, and therefore the bankrupt's transferee cannot be said to be a purchaser without notice. In re Lake, 3 Biss. (U. S.) 204, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 542, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,992. Compare Galvin v. Boyd, 25 Pittsb. Leg. J. 14, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,208.

An indorsee of a note before maturity, with notice of bankruptcy proceedings commenced able, and the transferee's title is good, if no assignee is ever appointed and the bankruptcy proceeding is afterwards discontinued.¹

Possession Pending Appointment of Assignee. — A receiver may be appointed pending the appointment of the assignee or trustee, when it is necessary to protect the interests of the creditors.² Sometimes the bankrupt is permitted to retain possession of his property pending the appointment of an assignee, in which case he is a sort of a trustee of such property.³

Protection of Interests Pending Appointment of Assignee. — The bankrupt has the right, until an assignee or trustee is appointed, to pursue all proper legal measures for the protection of his interests.⁴

b. PROPERTY ACQUIRED PENDING BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS. — Property acquired by a bankrupt after he has filed his petition in bankruptcy, or after an adjudication of bankruptcy in an involuntary proceeding, as the case may be, is not affected by the proceeding, and the bankrupt may, therefore, dispose of it at his pleasure,⁵ without liability for debts theretofore incurred.⁶

c. SURPLUS REMAINING AFTER TERMINATION OF PROCEEDING. — Where a surplus remains in the hands of the assignee or trustee, after the proceeding has terminated and the debts proved, if any, have all been paid, such surplus reverts to the bankrupt;⁷ but it has been held that a decree of against his indorser, cannot maintain an action thereon. Seaton v. Hinneman, 50 Iowa 395.

Raising Money for Fees. — A sale to raise money for the payment of the fees in the bankruptcy proceeding is forbidden, equally with sales for other purposes, by the rule that a bankrupt, after filing his petition, has no right to sell any of his property. In re Jessup, 19 Fed. Rep. 94; In re Thompson, 13 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 300, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,938.

3. Bankrupt in Possession Regarded as Trustee. — Before the appointment of an assignee the bankrupt is himself regarded as a trustee in respect to his property for the benefit of his creditors, and he is bound to preserve it for delivery to the assignee when appointed. In re Steadman, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 319.

According to this rule, a bankrupt has no right to buy of the marshal a stock of goods ordered by the court to be sold, because it is likely to depreciate in value. If he does so purchase, the sale will be set aside without proof that the price was inadequate, or that there was any fraud in fact intended. March v. Heaton, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 278, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 180, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,061.

So, too, the bankrupt, under such circumstances, is the proper person to be notified of dishonor of notes or bills on which he is indorser, and he may waive demand and notice. Ex p. Tremont Nat. Bank, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 409, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 397, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,169.

Since there can be no surplus until all the debts have been paid, a bankrupt cannot sue to set aside a sale of his lands made by a sheriff before the adjudication in bankruptcy. Vanslyke v. Shryer, 98 Ind. 126. And see infra, this section, Actions by Debtor.

the court is necessary to revest the title in the bankrupt.¹

3. Partnerships. — If a partner is adjudged a bankrupt or insolvent, the partnership is thereby immediately dissolved, because his interest in the partnership assets passes at once to his assignee.² The same result follows where an assignment for the benefit of creditors is made by a partner,³ or by the firm or all the partners.⁴

The Mere Fact of Insolvency, however, of a partner or of a firm, if there has been no adjudication of insolvency or bankruptcy, or any assignment, does not operate as a dissolution of the firm.⁵

4. Agency — Bankruptcy of Principal. — It is well settled that the bankruptcy of a principal revokes the agency, unless it is coupled with an interest, because the principal, by the adjudication, loses control of the subject-matter of the agency.⁶

Whether the Bankruptcy of the Agent revokes his authority is a question about which the authorities do not seem to be agreed. It was said in an English case that the agency is revoked.⁷ The proposition so laid down, however, is not logical, because the bankruptcy of an agent does not transfer the title to property held by him as such agent. In principle and reason it would seem that the agency is not affected, and the authorities tend to support this view.¹

5. Actions by Debtor — a. RIGHT OF ACTION IN GENERAL. — Though the bankrupt laws give to the assignee or trustee in bankruptcy all rights of action belonging to the bankrupt, so far as they grow out of debts or property which are assets, it is said that no bankrupt law of the United States has undertaken to prohibit actions on debts due the bankrupt before the bankruptcy to be brought in the name of the bankrupt, with the consent of the assignee, in the courts of those states whose judicial procedure and practice allow suits to be so brought.² On the other hand, many authorities hold that since the title to the bankrupt's property is in the assignee, the bankrupt cannot maintain any action in respect to it, but that all right of action is exclusively in the assignee,³ even though the property or claim was not scheduled with the other assets, and the bankruptcy proceeding was closed without knowledge of the bankrupt's right,⁴ unless an action by the assignee is no longer maintainable,

1. That the Authority of an Agent Is Not Revoked by His Bankruptcy is supported by the following decisions that a bankrupt agent may sue in respect to his principal's property, notwithstanding bankruptcy

Analogies. — This proposition derives support by analogy from the rule in regard to trustees. A bankrupt or insolvent may take, hold and execute a trust, and the trust estate is not affected by the bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding. This is well settled. Harris v. Harris, 29 Beav. 107; Copeman v. Gallant, 1 P. Wms. 314; Gardner v. Rowe, 2 Sim. & St. 346; Scott v. Surman, Willes 402; Carpenter v. Marnell, 3 B. & P. 41; *Gladstone v. So, too, the bankruptcy or insolvency of a trustee is cause for his removal from office by a court of equity. Bainbrigg v. Blair, 1 Beav. 495; Harris v. Harris, 29 Beav. 107; In re Bridgman, 1 Drew & Sm. 164; In re Roche, 1 Con. & Law. 306; Com'rs of Charitable Donations v. Archbold, 11 Ir. Eq. 187.

A further analogy is probably found in the rule in regard to executors and administrators, namely, that insolvency is a ground for refusing to grant letters, and also for revoking letters granted before the insolvency occurred, but that a revocation is effected only by an order of the court having jurisdiction. See the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. II, pp. 781, 824, 825.

Actions Affecting Exempt Property are maintainable by the bankrupt for his own benefit, and the assignee or trustee has no interest therein.²

b. PROSECUTION OF PENDING ACTIONS. — A provision that all rights of action belonging to a debtor shall vest in his assignee or trustee in bankruptcy, and that he may, if he requires it, be admitted to prosecute a pending action, is generally construed as giving an option to the assignee or trustee to prosecute a pending action brought by the debtor before his bankruptcy.³ An action is not abated by the bankruptcy of the plaintiff,⁴ and it has generally been held that the bankrupt may proceed with the action, if the assignee or trustee in bankruptcy does not assert his right in the premises,⁵ though it has also been held that the right to prosecute the action belongs exclusively to the assignee or trustee in bankruptcy, and that, if it is to be prosecuted further, it must be in his name.⁶

creditor of his right to sue, where the statute requires notice to be given to creditors, thereby making them parties to the proceeding,¹ but in the absence of any provision in the statute taking away such right, it would seem not to be affected by the proceeding, though a judgment, if recovered, may not put the creditor in any better position than other creditors.² And even where the right to sue would not otherwise exist, the bankruptcy court may grant leave to the creditor to sue.³

Pending an Application for a Discharge, however, it is held that a creditor cannot sue the bankrupt for a debt which would be released by the discharge.⁴

As to Claims Not Dischargeable in Bankruptcy, the pendency of the proceeding does not affect the creditor's right to pursue any remedy that he may have, by action or otherwise.⁵

b ACTIONS PENDING AT COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDING.—The general rule is that, where the statute merely authorizes the assignee or trustee in bankruptcy to take on himself the defense of actions pending against the bankrupt, he may exercise such authority at his option, and if he fails to do so the action may proceed against the bankrupt, and the judgment, if any is recovered, will bind the assignee or trustee the same as any other party who acquires an interest pendente lite.⁶ But such a judgment cannot operate any further than to establish the creditor's claim. It does not give him a lien on the property of the debtor or otherwise affect the assignee's title and power of disposal.⁷

As to statutory provisions specially applicable to existing liens, see the next following subdivision of this section Existing Liens Dissolved by Proceeding.

(b) Liens Created by Statute. — Liens created by statute, without any judicial proceeding, or any act on the part of the debtor, are not affected by the bankruptcy of the debtor after the lien is acquired,² but if any proceedings on the part of the creditor are necessary before the lien will attach, the matter is governed by the rules applicable to liens acquired by legal proceedings.³

(c) Liens Acquired by Legal Proceedings — aa. RULE UNDER ENGLISH BANKRUPTCY LAW. — The English bankruptcy law provides that where a creditor has attached any debt due him, or has issued an execution against the goods or lands of his debtor, he shall not be entitled to retain the benefit thereof against the trustee in bankruptcy of the debtor, unless he has completed the attachment or execution before the date of the receiving order and before notice of the presentation of any bankruptcy petition by or against the debtor or the commission of any available act of bankruptcy by the debtor.⁴

bb. RULE UNDER BANKRUPTCY LAW OF UNITED STATES. — The bankruptcy law of the United States is much more comprehensive in the particular under discussion than the English statute. It declares that a lien created by or obtained in or pursuant to any suit or proceeding at law or in equity, including an attachment on mesne process, or a judgment by confession, which was begun against a person within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy by or against such person, shall be dissolved by the adjudication, if it appears that the lien was obtained or permitted while the defendant was insolvent, and that its existence and enforcement will work a preference, or that the party to be benefited had reasonable cause to believe the defendant to be insolvent and in contemplation of bankruptcy, or that the lien was sought and permitted in fraud of the provisions of the statute.⁵ Another paragraph of the same section provides that all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, and the property affected by the levy, judgment, attachment, or other lien, shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from the same.¹

The Act of 1867 provided that an assignment in bankruptcy should dissolve any attachment on mesne process made within four months next preceding the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding, and no reference was made to the bankrupt's financial condition at the time of the attachment, or the creditor's knowledge thereof.²

770; Bear v. Chase, 99 Fed. Rep. 920; In re Kavanaugh, 99 Fed. Rep. 928.

Conflict with Paragraph f. — It has been held that paragraph c of section 67, referred to above, is irreconcilable with, and must give way to, paragraph f. See the next following note.

1. Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 67, par. f. And see the cases cited in the next preceding note.

Application of Paragraph f to Voluntary Bankruptcy Proceedings. — It has several times been held that paragraph f of section 67 applies only to involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy. In re De Lue, 91 Fed. Rep. 510; In re Easley, 93 Fed. Rep. 419; In re O'Connor, 95 Fed. Rep. 913.

But in later cases it has uniformly been held, in view of paragraph a of section 1, providing that "a person against whom a petition is filed" shall include a person who has filed a voluntary petition, that paragraph f of section 67 includes both classes of petitions. In re Richards, 95 Fed. Rep. 258; In re Fellerath, 95 Fed. Rep. 121; In re Vaughan, 97 Fed. Rep. 560; In re Dobson, 98 Fed. Rep. 86; In re Rhoads, 98 Fed. Rep. 399; In re Friedman, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 301, 1 Nat. Bankr. N. 208; Peck Lumber Mfg. Co. v. Mitchell, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 701, 2 Nat. Bankr. N. 262.

Repugnancy of Provisions. — The following differences between the provisions of paragraphs c and f, respectively, of section 67, will be observed: (1) Under paragraph c an attachment is dissolved by the bankruptcy of the debtor only when the attachment proceeding was commenced four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, without regard to the time when the lien was obtained, while under paragraph f the attachment is dissolved if the lien was obtained within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, without regard to the time when the attachment proceeding was begun; (2) under paragraph c the insolvency of the debtor must have been known to the creditor in order to invalidate his lien, while under sub-paragraph f knowledge on the part of the creditor of the fact of the insolvency is immaterial. The Circuit Court of Appeals, after pointing out these differences, and referring to the fact that both paragraphs relate to the same subject, held that they were clearly antagonistic and not to be reconciled, and that therefore paragraph f being the later provision, in point of time, must prevail. The court also found confirmation of its conclusions in the history of the act. In re Richards, 96 Fed.

Rep. 935. See also In re Rhoads, 98 Fed. Rep. 399.

If the Lien Was Obtained Within the Period Named it is dissolved under paragraph f by the subsequent bankruptcy proceeding, without regard to the time of the commencement of the proceeding in which the lien was obtained. In re Fellerath, 95 Fed. Rep. 121; In re Kenney, 97 Fed. Rep. 554; In re Vaughan, 97 Fed. Rep. 560.

cc. RULE UNDER STATE INSOLVENCY LAWS. — The insolvency laws of the several states also provide for the dissolution of attachments within a certain time before the commencement of an insolvency proceeding, though with some variations as regards the period designated,³ but they do not generally affect judgment liens or the liens of executions obtained before the commencement of an insolvency proceeding.⁴

The fact that an insolvency proceeding was begun for the express purpose of dissolving attachments, will not prevent it from having that effect. Wright v. Huntress, 77 Me. 179.

In Maryland an insolvency proceeding does not affect the lien of an attachment, if the attachment was levied before the petition in insolvency was filed. Thomas v. Brown, 67 Md. 512.

In Wisconsin an attachment, though levied after the filing of a petition in insolvency, is not dissolved by the insolvency proceeding, if it was levied before the assignment was made. Mowry v. White, 21 Wis. 417; Robinson Bros. Shoe Co. v. Knapp, 82 Wis. 343.

An Attachment to Enforce a Mechanic's Lien is not dissolved by an insolvency proceeding. Laughlin v. Reed, 89 Me. 226.

4. Judgment Liens as Affected by State Insolvency Laws. — See generally the insolvency laws of the several states. As to when a judgment becomes a lien, see the title JUDGMENTS.

In Connecticut it is held that a judgment lien is in the nature of a statutory mortgage, rather than an attachment, and when placed on land attached in the suit in which the judgment is rendered is not to be regarded as a mere continuance of the attachment and therefore is not dissolved by an insolvency proceeding. Beardsley v. Beecher, 47 Conn. 408.

Maryland. — Thomas v. Brown, 67 Md. 512.

Massachusetts. — Hall v. Crocker, 3 Met. (Mass.) 245; Cushing v. Arnold, 9 Met. (Mass.) 23.

(3) Circumstances Affecting Dissolution of Existing Liens — In General. — The dissolution of liens is effected, not merely by the insolvent condition of the debtor, but by the operation of the proceeding under the bankruptcy or insolvency law.¹ Such a proceeding operates ex proprio vigore,² but in respect to those liens only which were obtained within the statutory period.³

New Hampshire. — Hurlbutt v. Carrier, 68 N. H. 94.

The Minnesota statute provides that an assignment thereunder shall vacate every levy then pending, if made within ten days before the assignment, unless the debtor shall within five days file notice of his intention to retain all pending levies; provided, however, that such assignment shall not affect any levy under an execution issued on a money judgment entered on a complaint which was on file for at least twenty days before the entry of such judgment. Wolf v. McKinley, 65 Minn. 156; In re Jones, 33 Minn. 405; Stat. Minn. 1894, § 4,240.

Under the Rhode Island statute, "any attachment, any levy and any lien" within four months is dissolved Sweet's Petition, 20 R. I. 398.

New York. — Duffield v. Horton, 73 N. Y. 218, affirming 10 Hun (N. Y.) 140; Miller v. Bowles, 58 N. Y. 253; Brewers, etc., Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 264; Kaiser v. Richardson, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 301.

West Virginia. — Weisenfeld v. Mispelhorn, 5 W. Va. 46.

Intervention by the Assignee is not required in order to dissolve an attachment. Boese v. Locke, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 148.

A Conveyance to Trustees under a provision authorizing the settlement of bankrupts' estates in certain cases by trustees, who are given all the rights and powers of assignees in bankruptcy, dissolves attachments the same as if assignees had been appointed. Moors v. Albro, 129 Mass. 9.

Estoppel to Assert Dissolution of Attachment. — If the assignee abandons his claim to property attached, as where he permits a creditor attaching in the hands of a fraudulent vendee goods omitted from the bankrupt's schedule, and to pursue the goods through a protracted and expensive litigation for several years, without any intervention or claim thereto, the assignee cannot then have the attachment dissolved because it was sued out within four months before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, and claim the goods or their proceeds as part of the bankrupt's estate. Jacobson v. Sims, 60 Ala. 185.

3. Liens Not Obtained Within Period Designated by Statute — United States. — Doe v. Childress, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 642.

New Hampshire. — Batchelder v. Putnam, 54 N. H. 84, 20 Am. Rep. 115.

An Attachment by Trustee Process in Vermont is a lien on the funds in the hands of the trustee, and, where made more than four months before bankruptcy proceedings, is saved by the Act of 1867. Matter of Peck, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 160, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 43, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,886.

In the Computation of Time the first day is to be excluded and if the last day falls on Sunday it is to be excluded also. Richards v. Clark, 124 Mass. 491; Cooley v. Cook, 125 Mass. 406.

Fractions of a Day are to be considered, and therefore, where an attachment was levied March 8th at seven o'clock P. M., and proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced July 8th at 2:50 P. M., the attachment was held to be dissolved. Westbrook Mfg. Co. v. Grant, 60 Me. 88, 11 Am. Rep. 181.

Time Computed from Filing of Petition. — Though it is the assignment, under the Act of 1867, that dissolves an attachment, it so operates, by relation, from the time of the filing of the petition, and therefore an attachment is dissolved if it was within four months before that time, though not within four months before the assignment. Duffield v. Horton, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 140.

The recently enacted bankruptcy law of the United States contains, in the same section, two provisions respecting the dissolution of liens obtained in judicial proceedings, one referring to the time of the commencement of the suit or proceeding in which the lien was obtained, and the other referring to the time the lien actually attached. The weight of authority is that these two provisions are antagonistic, and that the one last mentioned must prevail (see supra this division of this section, Liens Acquired by Legal Proceedings — Rule under Bankruptcy Law of United States), though they seem at first to have been re-

Furthermore, it is the adjudication and the transfer of the bankrupt's property to the assignee that is effective. The mere filing of a petition, without any further proceedings, will not have that effect.¹ Neither does a composition under the bankruptcy law dissolve a lien, if no adjudication or assignment has been made, and the creditor has taken no part in the bankruptcy proceeding.² The fact that the assignment in bankruptcy was not recorded as required by the law does not affect its operation as to liens obtained within the statutory period.³

Knowledge on the Part of the Creditor of the conditions specified in the bankruptcy law of the United States is not material.⁴

If the Property Attached Is Not Subject to the Bankruptcy Law it has been held that the attachment is not dissolved by the bankruptcy proceeding,⁵ though the decisions of the federal courts have been to the contrary.⁶

Effect of Judgment in Attachment Suit.—An attachment within the statutory period is not saved from dissolution by the fact that the plaintiff in the attachment suit obtained a judgment after the bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding was commenced,⁷ or even if he obtained a judgment before the commencement of such proceeding, though judgments are not affected thereby, provided he acquired no lien by the judgment or by issuing an execution thereon.⁸

A Sale under an Attachment before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding does not secure to the creditor any rights that he would not otherwise have had. He cannot retain the proceeds of the sale as against the assignee in bankruptcy.⁹ A fortiori, a sale after the com-garded as distinguishable. In re De Lue, 91 Fed. Rep. 510; In re Lewis, 91 Fed. Rep. 632.

1. Mere Filing of Petition Not Sufficient to Dissolve Liens.—Golsan v. Powell, 32 La. Ann. 521; Haley v. Thurston, 60 N. H. 204.

The Effect of a Failure to Obtain a Discharge does not seem to have been determined. Exp. Foster, 2 Story (U. S.) 131, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,960.

Presumption as to Assignment.—In Janes v. Beach, 1 Mich. N. P. 94, it was held that where a garnishment was made within four months before the garnishee filed a petition in bankruptcy it would be presumed that a subsequent assignment was made.

2. Liens Not Dissolved by Composition Proceeding.—Sage v. Heller, 124 Mass. 213; Sullivan v. Langley, 124 Mass. 264.

If Assignees Are Appointed attachments within the statutory period are dissolved, though a composition was assented to before the appointment of the assignees, and was subsequently carried into effect. Cromwell v. Gallup, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 49.

3. Failure to Record Assignment.—Phillips v. Helmbold, 26 N. J. Eq. 202.

Nebraska.—Tootle v. Sheldon, 10 Neb. 44. New Hampshire.—Peck v. Jenness, 16 N. H. 516, 43 Am. Dec. 573.

New York.—Boese v. Locke, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 148; Brewers, etc., Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 264.

But see Henkelman v. Smith, 42 Md. 164.

The recovery of a judgment in an attachment proceeding, even though execution is issued thereon before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding, can make no difference under the bankruptcy law of 1898, because under that statute an adjudication in bankruptcy dissolves the lien of a judgment or execution as well as the lien of attachment, if obtained within four months before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding. Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 67, par. f.

A Garnishee Lien, it has been held, is not dissolved by a bankruptcy proceeding against the principal debtor, where judgment has been rendered both against the principal debtor and the garnishee. Krupp v. Tabor, 31 Mich. 174.

9. Sale of Attached Property—Assignee in Bankruptcy Entitled to Proceeds.—McCord v. McNeil, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 173, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,714; West Philadelphia Bank v. Dickson, 95 U. S. 180; In re Ellis, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 555. 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,400; Wheelock v. Hastings, 4 Met. (Mass.) 504; Andrews v. Southwick, 13 Met. (Mass.) 535; Edwards v. Sumner, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 393.

The Purchaser May Take a Good Title under the sale, as where the attachment was regularly commenced, a levy made, no stay of proceedings or other measures had to arrest commencement of a bankruptcy proceeding will give the creditor no right to retain the proceeds.¹

Foreign Attachments. — A proceeding under the bankruptcy law of the United States will dissolve the lien of an attachment obtained within the time limited, though in a state other than that in which the bankruptcy court is sitting,² but a proceeding under a state law cannot affect attachments in other states.³

Continuation of Lien by Order of Court. — The statutes providing that certain liens obtained before bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings are commenced against the debtor shall be dissolved by such proceedings, generally provide also that the liens may be continued by order of court, when that course will be beneficial to the estate.⁴

The Obligation of Contracts Is Not Impaired by the statutory provisions under consideration. Their only effect is to vary the remedy.⁵

The Nature of the Claim Is Not Material. — An attachment in an action for malicious prosecution is dissolved, as well as an attachment in an action on a contract.⁶

(4) Priority Between Creditors. — If the statute does not provide for the dissolution of liens acquired by judgments and executions, the recovery of a judgment and levy of execution thereunder relates back to the attachment and gives the execution creditor priority over a creditor who acquired a lien intermediate such attachment and levy of execution.⁷ In case creditors obtain successive liens on the property of the debtor, the first of which is subject to dissolution by bankruptcy proceedings, while the other is not affected thereby, it has been held that, if the first lien was for the full value of the property, its dissolution by an adjudication of bankruptcy would not operate in favor of the second lien, because that lien would not have been an effective security if the debtor had not been adjudged a bankrupt, and the provision of the statute preserving existing securities was not designed to improve the condition of any creditor, or to create new rights.⁸

The Acts of the Assignee in Bankruptcy cannot affect the priorities between lien creditors. Thus, it has been held that the affirmation by the assignee of a sale made by the bankrupt will not deprive an attaching creditor of his rights.⁹

XII. ASSIGNEE OR TRUSTEE — 1. Appointment and Tenure — a. HOW SELECTION IS MADE — (1) Election by Creditors — (a) Statutory Provisions. — The statutes generally provide that a person or persons to administer the estate of the suit in the state court, and there was no fraud, and the property was duly sold under the judgment of the state court. Doe v. Childress, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 642.

If property purchased by a creditor from his debtor is attached as the property of the debtor who is afterwards adjudged a bankrupt, whereupon the property is seized by the marshal under order of the court of bankruptcy and sold without any adjudication as to the ownership, such creditor may recover its full value. *Bromley v. the debtor, and variously designated by the statutes as assignees, trustees, or syndics, shall be chosen by the creditors at a creditors' meeting,¹ though other methods are prescribed in some jurisdictions.²

(b) Meeting of Creditors — aa. HOW CONVENED. — In England, the first meeting of creditors, at which the election of a trustee or trustees is ordinarily held, is summoned by the official receiver by publication of a notice of not less than seven days.³ Under the bankruptcy law of the United States the meeting is called by an order of the court.⁴ The corresponding provisions of the state statutes vary more or less in the different states, and in each case reference must be had to the local statute.

bb. TIME OF MEETING. — The time of the meeting is generally left, within certain limits, to the discretion of the court or officer whose duty it is to convene the creditors.⁵

cc. PLACE OF MEETING. — The English statute provides that the meeting shall be held at such place as, in the opinion of the official receiver, is most convenient to the majority of the creditors.⁶ In the United States the meeting is to be held at the county seat of the county in which the bankrupt had his principal place of business, resided, or had his domicile, unless that place would be manifestly inconvenient, or the bankrupt does not do business, reside, or have his domicile in the United States, in which case the court shall fix a place for the meeting which is most convenient for the parties in interest.⁷

dd. CONDUCT OF MEETING. — The meeting should be organized at the time designated in the notice, and should be kept open until an assignee is elected

Under the Washington Statute an election of an assignee in place of the person named by the insolvent may be ordered on the application of two or more creditors. Lammon v. Giles, 3 Wash. Ter. 117; Ball. Annot. Codes and Statutes (Wash.), § 5,843.

Designation of Office — Assignee. — Where the statute requires an assignment of the debtor's property to be made to the person chosen to represent the estate, such person is usually called an "assignee." This was the case under the bankruptcy law of the United States of 1867, and so it is still under some of the state laws. See Act March 2, 1867 (14 U. S. Stat. at L. 517), § 13, and the statutes of the several states.

Trustees. — When no assignment is required, but the title to the estate passes by force of the decree in bankruptcy, as is generally the case under the more recent statutes, the designation used is "trustee." 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 21, par. 1; Act. Cong. July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 44.

Syndic. — In Louisiana the term "syndic" is used. Rev. Laws La. 1897, §§ 1793, 1796; Field v. U. S., 9 Pet. (U. S.) 182; Tennessee Bank v. Horn, 17 How. (U. S.) 157.

5. Time of Meeting — England. — (Not later than fourteen days after the date of the receiving order, unless the court, for special reasons, directs otherwise). 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, 1st schedule, par. 1.

United States. — (Not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the adjudication.) Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 55, par. a.

Under the bankruptcy law of 1867, providing that the meeting should be held not less than ten nor more than ninety days after the issuing of a warrant in bankruptcy, it was held that the time within such limits was in the discretion of the register, and that sixty days from the date of the warrant was a reasonable time where all the creditors resided in Germany. Matter of Heys, 1 Ben. (U. S.) 333, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 21, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,447.

Meeting Held on Holiday. — Where a meeting was on Thanksgiving day, it was held that the proceedings had would not be set aside if it appeared that nobody was injured. McGlynn, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 127, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,804.

or it becomes apparent that no election can be had.¹ No creditor has a right to participate in the meeting until he has proved his claim.² In the election of the assignee the choice by the creditors should not be interfered with or influenced by the officer holding the meeting.³

Mode of Voting. — If no particular mode of voting is prescribed, it may be either by ballot or viva voce.⁴

A Creditor May Change His Vote as often as he chooses until the election is completed,⁵ but not after the meeting has adjourned.⁶

A Meeting May Be Adjourned for sufficient reasons,⁷ but if there is no regular adjournment, and the officer whose duty it is to preside fails to attend, the meeting wholly fails and another meeting must be regularly called.⁸

(c) Right to Vote — aa. IN GENERAL. — The right to vote for the assignee or trustee is generally limited to creditors who have proved their claims,⁹ and are not secured in respect thereto,¹⁰ or entitled to priority over other creditors.¹¹ All creditors who come within this description are entitled to vote,¹² and this right may not be inquired into except for the purpose of postponing the allowance of claims.¹³

9. Right to Vote Limited to Creditors Who Have Proved — England, — 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, 1st schedule, par. 8.

United States. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 56, par. a, giving the right to vote to creditors whose claims have been proved and allowed, in which respect this act differs from the act of 1867 (section 13) which merely required, for the purpose of voting, that claims should be proved.

The Certification of Claims by creditors merely gives them the right to vote, and cannot operate as an estoppel or res judicata in respect to subsequent judicial proceedings. Spears v. His Creditors, 40 La. Ann. 650.

13. Postponing Allowance of Claims. — By Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 56, par. a, the right to vote is given to creditors whose claims have been allowed, and section 57, par. d, provides that claims which have been duly proved shall be allowed unless objection to their allowance shall be made by parties in interest, or their consideration be continued for cause by the court on its own

Partnerships. — Where one member of a partnership goes into bankruptcy or insolvency, it is held that partnership creditors, as well as the individual creditors of the bankrupt, may vote for the assignee or trustee,¹ but only the partnership creditors can vote in case of the bankruptcy of the firm.²

Corporations may vote by their officers or by any other person on whom they may confer the authority.³

bb. SECURED CREDITORS. — The English bankruptcy law gives a secured creditor the right to vote only in respect to the balance that may be due him after deducting the value of his security,⁵ and to the same effect is the existing act of Congress,⁶ and also the insolvency laws of some of the states.⁷

cc. PREFERRED CREDITORS. — Creditors entitled to priority are, in respect to their right to vote, governed by the same rule as secured creditors.⁸

dd. POWER OF ATTORNEY. — A creditor may, by a power of attorney, authorize another to represent him in voting for the assignee or trustee.⁹

cc. POSTPONING PROOF OR ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS. — The bankruptcy law of 1867 authorized the court or the register, as the case might be, to postpone the proof of a claim until an assignee should be chosen, where there was doubt as to the validity of the claim or the right of the creditor to prove it, thus depriving the creditor, in such case, of his right to vote for the assignee.¹ Under the Act of 1898, the allowance of a claim may be postponed either on objections made by parties in interest, or by the court on its own motion, and under this provision, also, a creditor may be deprived of his right to vote, since only those whose claims have been allowed give such right.²

(d) Votes Necessary to Elect. — The statutes vary as to whether a majority in number of the creditors, or a majority in amount, or both, is necessary to elect an assignee or trustee. The English statute provides that the creditors entitled to vote may by ordinary resolution appoint a trustee.³ The bankruptcy law of the United States and some of the state insolvency laws require a majority vote in number and amount of all creditors present whose claims have been allowed,⁴ while others merely require a majority in amount.⁵ But whatever majority may be required, it must relate to claims proved before the election takes place, and the result cannot be affected by a claim subse-

These cases, holding that a majority of all the votes cast is not sufficient, unless it is also a majority of all that have been proved, were decided under the Act of 1867, but they are authority for the proposition that, under the Act of 1898, there must be a majority of all the claims allowed.

5. Majority in Amount of Claims. — Menke v. Lyndon, 124 Cal. 160; O'Neill v. Reynolds, 116 Cal. 264; Gaffney v. Piper, (Idaho 1896) 44 Pac. Rep. 552.

In Computing the Amount of a Claim for the purpose of the election of an assignee or trustee, interest to the day of the adjudication will be added if the claim bears interest, while a corresponding amount will be deducted if it did not bear interest and was not payable at the time of the adjudication.² The whole amount of a joint claim cannot be voted by one of the joint creditors without authority from the other or others, unless such creditors are partners.³ The amount of an indebtedness to the bankrupt of one of his creditors may be set off against the claim of such creditor,⁴ but the amount of a creditor's claim, as affecting his right to vote, cannot be reduced by an unliquidated claim of the bankrupt against him for damages.⁵

In Computing the Number of Creditors it would seem from the language of the statutes that joint creditors are ordinarily to be counted separately, but where they compose a partnership and one partner casts the vote of the firm, as he may do by virtue of his general authority as such partner, without special authorization from his copartners, it is to be counted as one vote only.⁶

(e) Confirmation of Election — aa. NECESSITY. — The statutes generally require the approval or confirmation by the court of the election of an assignee or trustee by the creditors. Some of the state insolvency laws contain this requirement,⁷ and so did the late bankruptcy law of the United States.⁸ The present bankruptcy law (1898) does not expressly require the approval by the bankruptcy court of the creditors' choice of a trustee;⁹ but it provides that the court may appoint trustees pursuant to the recommendation of the creditors, or when the creditors neglect to recommend or appoint,¹⁰ also that the Supreme Court of the United States may prescribe rules, forms, and orders for carrying the action into force and effect;¹¹ and one of the rules made by virtue of the authority so conferred provides that the appointment of a trustee by the creditors shall be subject to be approved or disapproved by the referee or by the judge.¹² The English statute provides that the board of trade may certify to the high court for its decision objections to the trustee appointed by the creditors.¹³

If Confirmation Is Refused, a new election may be ordered.¹⁴

bb. GROUNDS FOR REFUSING. — It is not the purpose of the statutes requiring confirmation that the court should arbitrarily disregard the wishes of the creditors manifested by an election according to law. Sound reasons should exist for refusing confirmation.¹⁵

Confirmation Has Been Refused where the assignee was chosen by the influence of the bankrupt or in his interest,¹ or in the interest of some of the creditors, to the prejudice of others;² where a large number of the creditors could not be represented at the meeting,³ or were wrongfully deprived of their right to vote;⁴ where the person elected made it a regular business to solicit the votes of creditors in bankruptcy proceedings;⁵ where a near relative of the bankrupt was elected;⁶ and where neither of the assignees appointed resided within the jurisdiction of the court.⁷

cc. WHO MAY OPPOSE. — The right to oppose the confirmation is not limited to the creditors, but belongs to the bankrupt also.⁸

(2) Appointment by Court. — In the event of the failure of an election by the creditors, the judge, or some other officer of the bankruptcy court, may make the appointment. This provision is probably common to all the statutes which authorize an election by creditors.⁹ Under some of the state insolvency laws there is no election by the creditors, but the appointment is made directly by the court.¹⁰

Matters Not Affecting the Result of the Election do not call for a refusal to confirm it. In re Jackson, 7 Biss. (U. S.) 280, 14 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 449, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,123; In re Pfromm, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 357, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,061.

(3) Appointment by Debtor. — Under some of the state insolvency laws proceedings are commenced by making an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the assignee in which is chosen by the assignor.¹

b. WHO MAY BE APPOINTED. — The statutes do not generally contain any restrictions as to the persons who may be appointed assignees or trustees,² though there are various disqualifying conditions, such as having an interest adverse to the creditors generally,³ near relationship to the debtor,⁴ residence out of the jurisdiction of the court⁵ or anything which, in the opinion of the court, shows unfitness for the office.⁶ But it is not an objection to the person proposed that he is a creditor,⁷ or the attorney of a creditor,⁸ or the attorney of the bankrupt in matters not connected with the bankruptcy,⁹ or that he is an officer of the bankrupt corporation.¹⁰ Nor does mere poverty disqualify.¹¹

c. NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT. — It is a usual requirement that notice of the appointment shall be given by publication or otherwise as the statute may direct.¹²

d. BOND. — An assignee or trustee, before entering on the duties of his office, must give a sufficient bond with sureties to secure the parties in interest against any loss that may occur by his fault,¹³ unless the creditors dispense United States. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 50, par. 6. The Act of 1867 did not provide that a bond should be given in all cases, but only when required either by the

with the bond; and even then the court may require it.¹ The statutes usually prescribe with considerable particularity the requisites to be observed in taking such bonds,² and it has been held that these provisions are mandatory, and must be strictly followed.³

Who May Question Sufficiency of Bond. — Only the creditors and the debtor are interested in the sufficiency of the bond, and if they acquiesce in the bond given, no one else can question it.⁴

Effect of Failure to Give Bond. — If a bond is not given as required by law the court may refuse to recognize the assignee or trustee as such,⁵ or may remove him and appoint another in his place,⁶ but if he is recognized by the court, all acts done by him are valid.⁷

e. TERMINATION OF OFFICE — (1) Discharge After Completion of Duties. — The assignee or trustee is entitled to be discharged from office on the completion of his duties and the settlement of his accounts, and when such a discharge is granted, he and his sureties are relieved of all further liability.⁸ But the court may, in a proper case, set aside the discharge, as where property of the insolvent is subsequently discovered.⁹

(2) Removal — The Power. — The English Bankruptcy Law provides that the creditors may, by ordinary resolution, at a meeting specially called for the purpose, remove a trustee appointed by them. The power of removal is also given to the board of trade, but if the creditors disapprove of the removal, an appeal may be taken to the high court.¹⁰ Removal under Canadian Statutes. — In re Evans, 13 Nova Scotia 326.

The Bankruptcy Law of the United States gives the court power to remove a trustee for cause on complaints of creditors.¹

The State Insolvency Laws generally provide for the removal of an assignee or trustee by the court.²

Who May Ask for Removal. — When judicial action is invoked to obtain the removal of an assignee or trustee, it may, in the absence of restrictions in the statute, be at the instance of any creditor,³ or of the bankrupt himself,⁴ or the court may act on its own motion.⁵

Grounds of Removal. — Any misconduct on the part of the assignee or trustee, or neglect of his duty, whereby the parties in interest may be prejudiced, furnishes grounds for removing him from office.⁶ It is also cause for removal property, as he may do, because it will be a burden instead of a benefit to the estate, the title to such property remains in the bankrupt.¹

Property of Bankrupt's Wife. — Under the common-law rule in regard to the property rights of married women, all the personalty of a married woman, including choses in action which the husband had reduced into possession, and any other interest acquired by him jure mariti, passed to his trustee in bankruptcy,² subject to the wife's right to an adequate provision out of such property;³ but this doctrine is not applicable under the modern statutes securing to married women property owned by them at the time of marriage, or acquired afterwards.⁴ There are, however, still interests which a husband acquires jure mariti in his wife's property, such as an estate by the curtesy, or the specifically the kinds of property which will pass to the trustee. See Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 70.

Whatever an Administrator Would Take, in case of intestacy, will pass to the trustee or assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency. Williams v. Heard, 140 Mass. 529.

Omission from the Schedule does not prevent property from passing to the assignee. Holbrook v. Coney, 25 Ill. 543.

Insolvency of Purchaser while Goods Are in Transit. — Where the purchaser of goods sold on credit and shipped to him becomes insolvent while the goods are in transit, and the seller does not exercise his right of stoppage in transitu, the title vests in the trustee on delivery. McElroy v. Seery, 61 Md. 389, 48 Am. Rep. 110.

Where Movables Are Sequestered and Bonded by the defendant, the title to them remains in him until divested by due course of law, and therefore where he becomes insolvent while so in possession of such movables, it is his duty to put them in his schedule. Downey v. Kenner, 42 La. Ann. 1129. Compare In re Albrecht, 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 287, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 145, holding that where money attached is released on bond and deposited to indemnify the sureties, such money does not pass to the assignee.

Property Acquired After the Adjudication of insolvency does not pass to the assignee, under the present Maryland statute. In re Banks, 87 Md. 425.

But under the Maryland Act of 1834, property accruing to an insolvent after his discharge, by gift, descent, bequest, devise, or in course of distribution, passed to the trustee. Lavender v. Gosnell, 43 Md. 153.

Property Transferred Pending Insolvency Proceedings. — Where a debtor, pending insolvency proceedings against him, makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the property so assigned passes to the receiver afterwards appointed in the insolvency proceeding. Arnold's Petition, 15 R. I. 15.

Improvements on Public Lands are property and as such pass to an assignee in bankruptcy. French v. Carr, 7 Ill. 664.

statutory substitute therefor.¹ By the dealings of the parties also a husband may acquire interests in his wife's property, or its increase, which will pass to his assignee or trustee, as where she permitted him to buy property in his own name with her means, on the faith of which he contracted debts,² or where he made accumulations by his own skill and energy in using her capital, though the transactions were in her name.³

The Property of a Bankrupt's Minor Children, accumulated by their own efforts with the bankrupt's consent, is not assets of the bankrupt's estate.⁴

An Interest Accruing under a Will, if of such a nature as to be transferable or transmissible, is an existing interest in the party, and will pass to his assignee or trustee in bankruptcy.⁵

The Good Will of a Business is a well-recognized species of personal property which will pass to a trustee in bankruptcy or insolvency.⁶

b. LEASES.—Leaseholds are property which will pass to the lessee's assignee or trustee in bankruptcy, subject to his power of disclaimer, unless they are specially excepted by the statute, or by the terms of the lease.⁷

An Agreement to Lease also passes by virtue of the same principles as are applicable to leases.⁸

c. FRANCHISES AND LICENSES.—A Franchise from which the owner derives profit passes to his assignee or trustee.⁹

Privileges—Estoppel to Deny Character as Property.—A bankrupt is estopped to deny that his assignee was entitled to a permit held by him from the comptroller of a city, because it was revocable at the pleasure of the comptroller, and could not be transferred without permission, where he had, before his bankruptcy,

Patent Rights are therefore included, though they are not subject to seizure under attachment or execution, and though title thereto can be transferred only by assignment.¹

d. TRADE MARKS AND TRADE NAMES. — A trade mark is property which, if not personal in its character, passes to the assignee or trustee in bankruptcy of the owner,³ but it has been held that the right to use one's name as a trade mark does not so pass.⁴

e. POWERS OF APPOINTMENT. — A mere power of appointment does not pass to the assignee or trustee, nor is there any equity to compel a bankrupt to execute such a power in favor of his creditors;⁵ but if, in default of appointment, the property is to vest in the bankrupt in fee, and the bankruptcy occurs before an appointment is made, the power is then defeated, and the property vests in the assignee in bankruptcy.⁶

f. CHOSSES IN ACTION — (1) In General. — Under the comprehensive terms of the bankruptcy and insolvency laws, the trustee or assignee succeeds to the title to all choses in action, so far as they arise out of contract, or injuries in respect to property; and it is immaterial whether or not such choses in action are negotiable, or whether they stand in the name of the bankrupt or of some other person.⁷ Accordingly he may recover the compensation due for services placed a certain value on it in a statement of his assets as a basis for credit. Matter of Gallagher, 16 Blatchf. (U. S.) 410, 19 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 224, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,192.

ment after the bankruptcy proceeding has been commenced.¹

(2) Contracts to Purchase Land. — Where a bankrupt has entered into a contract for the purchase of land, his right thereunder is a right of property which will pass to his assignee or trustee,² unless the bankrupt has forfeited his right by nonperformance of his part of the contract.³

(3) Shares or Memberships in Corporations and Exchanges. — Shares of stock in a corporation are assets which on the insolvency or bankruptcy of the owner pass to his assignee or trustee, if accepted by him.⁴

Memberships in Exchanges and similar associations constitute property and are assets in the bankruptcy, though the power of disposal is subject to the rules and regulations of the association. This is now well settled,⁵ though the contrary has been held.⁶

(4) Liabilities of Stockholders. — The liabilities of stockholders for unpaid subscriptions are assets of the corporation which pass to its assignee or trustee in bankruptcy,⁷ but their statutory liability for the debts of the corporation is not such an asset.⁸

(5) Insurance Policies. — Insurance policies on the life of a bankrupt, if they are payable to himself or his estate and have a present value, pass to his assignee or trustee as assets for the payment of debts,⁹ but not if the policies are payable to third persons, where the premiums are paid by the beneficiaries,¹⁰ or where the insurance is for the benefit of the bankrupt's family, and the premiums were paid by the bankrupt before bankruptcy or did not exceed the amount allowed therefor by local statutes.¹¹

Thus, where the depositor of money in bank becomes a bankrupt after payment of a check drawn by him against the deposit, the assignee cannot compel the bank to pay the amount of such check. Chicago Fourth Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank, 68 Ill. 398.

The Proceeds of a Sale May Not Be General Assets, because the rules of the exchange provide that a member, on becoming insolvent, may assign his seat to be sold, and that the proceeds shall, to the exclusion of his outside creditors, be first applied to the benefit of the members to whom he is indebted, the surplus, if any, remaining after such application. *Hyde v. (6) Claims Against Government. — Claims against the government, when founded on contract, or for property taken or injured, including claims for spoliation, will pass to the trustee or assignee appointed on the bankruptcy or insolvency of the claimant,¹ regardless of whether payment can be enforced,² and notwithstanding the statute forbidding the assignment of claims against the United States,³ because that statute does not apply to devolutions of title by force of law, without any act of the parties, or to involuntary assignments compelled by law.⁴ But if a claim is founded on a gratuity or voluntary donation, there is no right of property which can pass to trustee or assignee.⁵

g. CONDITIONAL, CONTINGENT, AND DEFEASIBLE INTERESTS. — A contingent claim to property which is a mere expectancy or possibility, dependent on an event which may never happen, so that the insolvent, at the time of the adjudication, had no interest which he could assign or devise, or which could have descended from him, does not pass to his assignee, unless it is so provided by statute,⁶ or the expectancy is coupled with an interest, as in cases of contingent remainders, executory devises, etc.⁷ Conditional interests in property do not pass, if the condition is such that the party has no power of disposal,⁸ but the rule is otherwise as to property of which the bankrupt is the substantial owner, though he holds it subject to a condition which may affect his right to possession or enjoyment, or which may even eventually defeat his title.¹ The bankrupt may have acquired property subject to the condition that it should terminate on the event of his bankruptcy, so that it will not pass to his assignee or trustee, but such conditions are strictly construed.²

Property Obtained by the Fraud of the Bankrupt for which the other party may disaffirm the transaction and recover the property does not pass.³

h. TRUSTS AND EQUITABLE INTERESTS — (1) Property Held in Trust by Debtor. — Bankruptcy and insolvency laws contemplate only property in which debtors have a beneficial interest, and which is applicable to the payment of their debts. Therefore, property held by a debtor in trust for another does not pass to the debtor's assignee or trustee in bankruptcy or insolvency.⁴

G. died leaving no issue, and another son of the testator was adjudged a bankrupt and died after the testator's death, but before the death of G. It was held that the bankrupt had a vested interest in the trust estate, which passed to his assignee in bankruptcy.

though the trust is implied and no declaration of trust has been recorded.¹ But if the trust was a secret and fraudulent one, the trustee's assignee in bankruptcy is entitled to the property so held.²

In the Case of Money Held in Trust for another, the rule is that if it is ear-marked or separately kept and retained as a trust fund, it will not pass to the trustee's assignee in bankruptcy or insolvency. But an amount of money due from the bankrupt or insolvent, as trustee, and which could not be distinguished from any other moneys in his possession or under his control, or which was only due from him because he had used trust funds for his own purposes or otherwise had misapplied them, cannot be considered as property held by him in trust.³ The general estate of an insolvent trustee will, however, pass to his assignee in insolvency or bankruptcy, subject to a lien in favor of the cestui que trust, where the insolvent has misappropriated the trust funds or property, or has so commingled the same with his own that separation and identification are no longer possible, if it appears that such trust funds or property form a part of the insolvent's general estate,⁴ and the burden of proving this fact is on the cestui que trust.⁵

A Note Taken by a Guardian who was indebted to his ward's estate, payable to himself as guardian, but in settlement of an individual debt, will nevertheless pass to his assignee in bankruptcy, where the probate court, in settling his account as guardian, disallowed the note as a credit, or as belonging to the ward's estate. Beeson v. Shively, 28 Kan. 574.

A Note Taken by a Husband for a Debt Due His Wife for the rent of a house owned by her will not pass to the husband's assignee in bankruptcy, and the question whether the house was fraudulently conveyed to the wife cannot be determined on an application by the assignee to compel the delivery to him of such note. In re Westervelt, 3 N. 5. Burden of Proof. — Morrison v. Lincoln Sav. Bank, etc., Co., 57 Neb. 225.

Presumptions. — When a trustee wrongfully securities taken by him for the price, do not pass to his assignee in insolvency or bankruptcy, but remain the property of the principal.¹

A Banker, as respects general deposits, does not hold the funds deposited as a trustee, but becomes an ordinary debtor of the depositor.² If, however, a deposit is made for a particular purpose, the rule is different. In such case the fund remains the property of the depositor, and does not pass to the banker's trustee in bankruptcy.³ In case of a deposit, for collection, of bills not due, the banker is the agent of the depositor, as long as such bills remain uncollected, and they do not pass to the banker's trustee in bankruptcy.⁴

A Partner in Possession of Partnership Assets is a trustee for the partnership creditors, and if he becomes a bankrupt such assets do not pass to his assignee.⁵

A Vendor in an Executory Contract to Convey Land holds the legal title in trust for the vendee, but he has a beneficial interest in it until the price is paid, and therefore on his bankruptcy such interest passes to his assignee.⁶

(2) Property Held in Trust for Debtor. — The general rule is that property to which a debtor is beneficially entitled is assets in bankruptcy or insolvency, though the legal title is held by a third person,⁷ but the terms of the instrument creating the trust may preclude any interest from passing to the beneficiary's assignee in bankruptcy.⁸

(3) Equities and Rights of Redemption. — Equities and rights of redemption are property, and pass to the assignee or trustee in bankruptcy of the owner,⁹

i. UNDIVIDED INTERESTS — (1) Partnership Property. — In case a member of a partnership is adjudged a bankrupt or insolvent, his interest in the firm passes to the trustee or assignee, the same as other property in which he has an undivided interest,² that is, the trustee or assignee becomes a tenant in common with the solvent partners,³ and is entitled to share the surplus of the partnership property remaining after payment of the partnership debts;⁴ but it is generally held that he does not acquire the right to deal with the joint property.⁵

(2) Undivided Interests in Real Estate. — An undivided interest in real estate passes to the owner's assignee or trustee in bankruptcy.⁶

j. PROPERTY TRANSFERRED BY DEBTOR — (1) In General. — Where a debtor transfers property before bankruptcy proceedings are commenced, and there is no fraud in the transaction, such property cannot pass to the assignee or trustee, though the deed, when the transfer was in that form, has not been recorded.⁷

present bankruptcy law provides that all assignments, etc., made by a bankrupt within four months before the filing of the petition, with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, shall be "null and void," and that the property assigned shall pass to the trustee in bankruptcy.¹

(4) Preferences — Time Limitation in the Statutes. — A preference given by a bankrupt within a limited time before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy (three months in England and four months under the bankruptcy law of the United States) is void as to the trustee, and he may recover from the preferred creditor the property so received by him or its value.² Similar provisions are contained in the state insolvency laws, varying somewhat in the different states as to the period within which the preference must have been given.³

preferential conveyance made in fraud of the statute shall be void is to be construed as meaning simply that it is voidable only in favor of proceedings under and in aid of the law. A creditor who is not a party to the insolvency proceedings, but is claiming the property by virtue of an attachment or judgment against the insolvent debtor, can claim no benefit from this provision.⁴

The Term "Creditor" is used in the statutes in a large sense, and means one who has a right to require the fulfilment of an obligation or contract.²

Intent of Debtor. — The rule as to the materiality of the debtor's intent in regard to acts which operate as preferences is generally the same whether the validity of the transaction, or its effect as an act of bankruptcy, is the matter in question.³ If nothing has been done or omitted by the debtor with such intent, where the intent is material, a creditor cannot be deprived of the benefit of any measures that he may have taken to obtain satisfaction of his claim, though he knew that the debtor was insolvent.⁴

Creditor's Knowledge as to Circumstances and Intent of Debtor. — Under some of the statutes, the assignee can recover money or property paid or transferred to a creditor by the debtor only when the creditor knew or had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, and that he intended to create a preference.⁵ Other statutes do not require such Payment of Money. — It has been held that money paid by the debtor, with intent to prefer, cannot be recovered back by his assignee, under the Massachusetts statute, though the creditor, when he received the money, also purchased goods of the debtor, knowing him to be insolvent. Wall v. Lakin, 13 Met. (Mass.) 167.

As to the effect of a preference as an act of bankruptcy, see supra, this title, Acts of Bankruptcy or Insolvency — Preference of Creditors.

4. Assignment of Claim to Nonresident. — In Proctor v. National Bank of Republic, 152 Mass. 223, it was held that where a resident creditor, before the debtor was adjudged insolvent, transferred his claim to a nonresident, the assignee in insolvency could not recover from him the amount received therefor, though he made the transfer with knowledge of the debtor's insolvency, and agreed to pay the transferee any deficit that might result on the collection of the claim, and also the expenses of collection.

A Judgment Recovered in Another State by a creditor who resides in the same state as the debtor is not affected by the insolvency law, in the absence of any co-operation by the debtor, and therefore the assignee cannot recover from such creditor the amount received by him on such judgment. Thompson v. Tetley, 68 N. H. 481.

knowledge or belief in order to avoid the transaction, but declare it void if only the debtor was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency.¹

Reasonable Cause to Believe that a Debtor Is Insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, or that he intends to give an unlawful preference, is held to consist of a knowledge of some fact or facts calculated to produce such a belief in the mind of an ordinarily intelligent man. It is not sufficient that there is a reasonable cause to suspect that such condition exists; "reasonable cause to believe" is not synonymous with "reasonable cause to suspect."²

Evidence. — As bearing on the question whether a creditor, at the time of a transfer or payment to him by his debtor, knew or had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, it is competent to show his general reputation as to solvency or insolvency in the vicinity of the creditor's place of business.³ The circumstances of the creditor, or any use that he proposed to make of security given him by the debtor, are not admissible to show whether or not he had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent.⁴

Knowledge of Agent Imputed to Principal. — It is not necessary that a creditor should, in all cases, personally know that his debtor is insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency. If the preference was given through an agent of the creditor, the agent's knowledge of the facts will be imputed to his principal.⁵

Liability of Agent. — If the transfer or payment was made to an agent of the creditor a recovery may be had against the agent, though his agency was known to the debtor at the time of the payment, and he had since turned the money over to his principal. This is in accordance with the rule that where an agent receives money which the law prohibits him from taking, it is no defense to a suit brought against him by the person entitled to recover the money that he has paid it over to his principal.⁶

Validity of Prohibition Against Preferences. — The validity of a provision of a state insolvency law prohibiting any transfer or payment by a debtor to a creditor for the purpose of giving him a preference over other creditors is not open to question, as far as resident creditors are concerned, because it is well settled that each state, so long as it does not impair the obligation of any contract, has the power, by general laws, to regulate the conveyance and disposition of all property, real or personal, within its limits and jurisdiction.⁷ In regard to nonresident creditors, it has been argued that such a provision is invalid, but it was held to be a usual and valid exercise of the power of the state over all property within its jurisdiction as to all such conveyances, whether made to its own citizens or citizens of other states.¹

k. PROPERTY IN OTHER COUNTRIES OR STATES — (1) Rule in England. — The Personal Estate of a bankrupt, wherever situate, has always been held, under the English bankruptcy laws, to pass to the assignee or trustee in accordance with the rule that personalty follows the person of the owner, and is governed by the law of his domicile.²

Real Property, on the other hand, so far as it is situate in the Queen's dominions vests in the trustee,³ and though the present statute in terms includes real estate, "whether situate in England or elsewhere,"⁴ such provision is probably of no practical effect, because real estate is governed by the law of its situs, and there is no principle which would require the recognition by that law of the adjudication as affecting such property.⁵

(2) Rule in United States. — Under the National Bankruptcy Act, the purpose of which is to establish a uniform system of bankruptcies throughout the United States, the trustee takes all the property of the bankrupt, whether it is in the state of the bankrupt's domicile, or in other states,⁶ but it is held that his title does not extend to property in foreign countries,⁷ nor is the title of a foreign trustee or assignee recognized, either in the federal or state courts, so far as to affect the right of resident creditors to resort to the local assets, or to prevent the bankrupt from transferring them.⁸

Under the State Insolvency Laws the assignee or trustee takes only such property as has its situs within the jurisdiction of the court in which the proceeding is pending,⁹ unless the insolvent assigns to him assets which may be situate in other jurisdictions,¹ and even the title so acquired is subordinate to the claims of creditors in such other jurisdictions who have seized the property under attachments.²

1. PROPERTY ACQUIRED AFTER COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS.— In England, all the property acquired by a bankrupt after the commencement of the proceedings and before a discharge, except wages or salary earned by him, passes to the assignee or trustee,³ but the right to such property remains in the bankrupt until his assignee or trustee interferes to claim it,⁴ and in the absence of such interference he may sue on any contract made by him,⁵ and may also, for a valuable consideration, transfer any of his after-acquired property so as to give a good and indefeasible title to the transferee.⁶ Property acquired after the discharge belongs to the bankrupt free from all the debts from which he was discharged.⁷

In the United States, the assignee or trustee does not take any property acquired by the bankrupt after the adjudication, but all such property belongs to the bankrupt, free from all provable debts, if he obtains a discharge.⁸ As to property acquired intermediate the filing of the petition in bankruptcy and the adjudication, it was held under the late statute (1867) that the title passed to the assignee;⁹ but the present law has been construed as giving the trustee only such property as the bankrupt owned at the time the petition was filed.¹

m. EXEMPTIONS AND ALLOWANCES. — The English Statute allows the bankrupt absolute exemptions only to a very limited extent, namely, the tools of his trade, if any, and the necessary wearing apparel and bedding of himself, his wife and his children, the whole not to exceed twenty pounds in value.² If the bankrupt is an officer of the army or navy or is in the civil service of the crown, the trustee is entitled to receive so much of the pay of the bankrupt as the court, with the consent of the chief officer of the department under which the pay is enjoyed, may direct.³ If he is in the receipt of any salary or income otherwise than as aforesaid, or any half pay, or pension from the treasury, the court may order the whole, or any part, as it thinks just, to be paid to the trustee.⁴

In the United States, the practice of exempting a part of the debtor's property has been carried to a great extent. The present bankruptcy law allows the exemptions which are prescribed by the law of the debtor's domicile at the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.⁵ The state insolvency laws generally allow the debtor the same exemptions as are provided in case of executions or other forced sales,⁶ and in some states the right of exemption

b. WHEN TITLE VESTS. — Where the statute requires an assignment of the debtor's property, whether it is to be made by the debtor himself, or by the judge or some other officer, it is evident that the assignee acquires his title by virtue of the assignment. This was the principle of the late bankruptcy law of the United States,² and some of the state insolvency laws still embrace this feature.³ By the more recent bankruptcy laws, however, the assignment is dispensed with, and a trustee is appointed.⁴ Under these statutes, the title of the trustee vests at the time of his appointment,⁵ and relates back, in England, to the time of the commission of the act of bankruptcy on which the proceeding is founded,⁶ and in the United States, to the time of the adjudication.⁷ Under the late bankruptcy law of the United States (1867) the assignee's title related back to the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed,⁸ and it did also under the Act of 1841.⁹ The state insolvency laws vary somewhat in their provisions on this subject.¹⁰

c. HOW TITLE IS DIVESTED. — On the termination of a bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding and the discharge of the assignee or trustee, the title to the surplus, if any, remaining in his hands after the payment of debts and expenses, reverts in the debtor.¹¹ The title of the assignee or trustee is also divested by a discontinuance of the proceeding,¹ or by a composition,² but not by the mere fact that the debtor fails to receive a discharge.³

4. Powers, Duties, and Liabilities — a. GENERAL PRINCIPLES — Power to Bind Estate. — The general rule is that the powers of the assignee or trustee are simply administrative in character,⁴ and, while he may incur personal liability, he cannot bind the estate by contract or otherwise so as to impose any liability on it,⁵ though in some jurisdictions he is authorized to accept leases held by the insolvent.⁶

Good Faith and Diligence. — An assignee or trustee is required to exercise good faith and reasonable diligence in the administration of his trust, and his responsibilities are measured accordingly.⁷

Joint Trustees. — Where there are joint trustees, the general rule is that they must unite in legal proceedings, but if one has an interest adverse to the estate, the other or others may act without him.⁸ And one cannot be bound

If a surplus remains in the hands of the syndic after paying all the debts scheduled, he is not bound to pay it over to the debtor, if new debts appear. Gottschalk v. Creditors, 12 La. Ann. 70.

5. No Authority to Bind Estate. — Smith v. Goodman, 43 Ill. App. 530; Moran v. Risley, (Marine Ct. Tr. T.) 1 City Ct. (N. Y.) 229.

Occupation of Leased Premises. — The assignee in insolvency of a tenant at will does not become liable for the use and occupation of the premises, merely because the goods of the insolvent were allowed to remain on the premises for two months and the assignee entered with workmen, who for several days were engaged in removing the goods. Wales v. Chase, 139 Mass. 538.

Torts of Assignee. — A bankrupt's estate is not liable for torts committed by the assignee. Adams v. Meyers, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 306, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 214, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 62.

Personal Liability to Creditors. — An assignee in bankruptcy is personally liable to creditors entitled to priority, if he pays other claims, leaving unpaid claims of the creditors entitled to priority,² or if he neglects to reserve funds to pay known and undetermined claims as required by the statute.³

b. COLLECTION OF ASSETS — (1) In General. — The first duty of the assignee or trustee is to collect and preserve the assets of the estate, whether they are in the hands of third persons or of the debtor himself.⁴ The authority vested in him for this purpose corresponds in extent with the duty. As the successor to the title of the debtor, the assignee or trustee may pursue all the remedies for the recovery of the assets of the estate that would have been available to the debtor himself.⁵ He also represents the creditors and may pursue any remedy that may be necessary to protect their interests, and there-

Property Sold under Mortgage Without Leave of Court. — Where a mortgage is foreclosed without leave of the bankruptcy court, after the adjudication, the court may, on the application of the trustee, direct the restoration of such property to him. In re Brooks, 91 Fed. Rep. 508.

But Where Property Was in Possession of the Mortgagee when the bankruptcy proceeding was commenced, the bankruptcy court cannot, on a summary application, order him to deliver it to the trustee. Yeatman v. Savings Inst., 95 U. S. 764; In re Buntrock Clothing Co., 92 Fed. Rep. 886. See also Heath v. Shaffer, 93 Fed. Rep. 647.

Discounting Notes belonging to the estate is not proper, unless authorized by the court. Nicholson v. Chapman, 1 La. Ann. 222.

A Debt Due from the Assignee to the debtor must be accounted for at its face value and not merely for what it sells at public auction. Benchley v. Chapin, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 173.

Deposit of Funds. — The bankruptcy law of the United States requires the trustee to deposit the funds of the estate in such depositories as shall be designated by the court. Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 61; Act March 2, 1867 (14 U. S. Stat. at L. 517), § 17; State Nat. Bank v. Dodge, 124 U. S. 333.

As to the requirements of the state insolvency laws in this respect, see the various local statutes.

If the trustee fails to deposit funds as required by law, he is liable for the interest which the depository would have paid. In re Newcomb, 32 Fed. Rep. 826.

And if, without reasonable excuse, he retains money in his hands for a considerable time, he is liable for legal interest on the amount. In re Thorp, 2 Ware (U. S.) 294, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 14,002; In re Burt, 27 Fed. Rep. 548.

Completing Manufacture of Goods. — Where partly manufactured goods come into the hands of an assignee, the court may order him to finish them where it appears that the estate will be benefited thereby. Foster v. Ames, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 313, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 455, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,905.

fore he may contest claims and rights of property which the bankrupt himself could not contest.¹

(2) Property Claimed or Held Adversely. — It is the duty of an assignee or trustee, when he is satisfied that property which has come into his hands did not belong to the debtor, to return it to the owner,² but if he is in doubt about the matter, he should retain possession, and leave the claimant to seek his remedy in the proper court.³

Property Held under Judicial Process. — The present bankruptcy law of the United States provides that all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens, obtained through legal proceedings against a person who is insolvent, at any time within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against him, shall be deemed null and void, in case he is adjudged a bankrupt, and the property affected shall be deemed wholly discharged and released from such liens, and shall pass to the trustee as a part of the estate of the bankrupt. It is also provided that the court may order such conveyances as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this provision.⁴ The late statute (Act 1867) dissolved the liens of attachments only, and therefore property held under an execution issued out of a state court could not be taken from him by a federal court.⁵

Where Property Is in the Possession of a Receiver appointed by a state court before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, it is held that the bankruptcy court has no power to interfere,⁶ unless the receiver's title is for some cause impeachable under the bankruptcy law.¹ The assignee's remedy is by an application to the state court.²

An Assignee for the Benefit of Creditors cannot retain the assigned estate as against a trustee in bankruptcy, though the assignment was made before the bankruptcy proceedings were commenced.³

(3) Discovery of Assets. — Provision is usually made for the examination of the debtor and third persons in order to obtain disclosures as to the property and credits of the debtor,⁴ though it is the duty of the assignee or trustee, independently of such provision, to make reasonable inquiries concerning the matter.⁵

c. ABANDONMENT OF PROPERTY. — The assignee or trustee is not bound to take any property which may be a burden to the estate instead of a benefit,⁶

Examination of Books and Papers. — The bankrupt cannot refuse to produce his books and papers for examination by the trustee on the ground that they may contain incriminating matter. In re Supiro, 92 Fed. Rep. 310.

Books of Corporation Organized by Insolvent Partners. — Where the circumstances indicate that a corporation, organized by partners who had failed in business, was a mere fiction, and that its assets were really the assets of the partners, their wives being the holders of substantially all the stock, the books of such corporation may be examined, to ascertain the debts due it, in bankruptcy proceedings subsequently instituted on the voluntary petition of the partners. In re Horgan, 97 Fed. Rep. 319.

Examination of Bankrupt's Wife. — In those states where a wife is a competent witness in proceedings to which her husband is a party, she may, on his bankruptcy, be examined as to transactions to which she was a party or facts of which she was a witness. In re Foerst, 93 Fed. or which is encumbered to the amount of its full value;¹ and if he elects not to take it, the title remains in the bankrupt.² A reasonable time is allowed the assignee or trustee to make his election, and an unreasonable delay in electing to take will be deemed an election to reject.³

d. SETTING ASIDE FRAUDULENT OR PREFERENTIAL TRANSFERS. — Since the assignee or trustee represents the creditors, he may sue to set aside any transfer or incumbrance by the debtor, if it was fraudulent as to creditors generally, or was made in violation of the bankruptcy or insolvency law,⁴ if the assets in hand are not sufficient to pay all the debts.⁵ While it is largely a matter of discretion whether or not he will undertake to avoid a preference or fraudulent conveyance,⁶ it is nevertheless his duty as well as his right to do this, when the interests of the creditors clearly require it, and if he neglects his plain duty in the premises, the creditors may compel him to act or may have him removed,⁷ but the weight of authority seems to be that the right of action belongs exclusively to the assignee or trustee, and that the creditors cannot sue.¹ There are, however, numerous decisions which hold that, in the event of his failure or refusal, the creditors may sue, though the fund or property recovered is to be paid or delivered to the assignee or trustee for distribution according to law.²

Distinction Between Preferences and Fraudulent Conveyances. — In regard to conveyances, etc., which are voidable in accordance with the general principles of law, because made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, the assignee or trustee merely succeeds to the rights of the creditors, and if he neglects or refuses to sue to set aside such a conveyance, a suit for that purpose may be brought by the creditors,³ or by any one to whom the assignee or trustee may have sold his title to the property fraudulently conveyed.⁴ But mere preferences, which are impeachable only because they are in contravention of the bankruptcy or insolvency laws, stand on a different footing. The right to avoid them belongs exclusively to the assignee or trustee, and his vendee cannot exercise such right.⁵

The Evidence admissible in suits to set aside conveyances by insolvent debtors is necessarily the same, whether the suit is brought by a creditor or by the trustee in bankruptcy or insolvency, and the rules which govern have already been considered in another part of this work.⁶

c. CONTINUING BUSINESS. — When the interests of the creditors require it, the assignee or trustee may, by leave of court, continue the business of the debtor for a limited time.⁷

to sell the property of the debtor, so that it may be converted into money for the payment of debts, is clearly necessary, and is usually conferred on the assignee or trustee in express terms.¹

(b) Leave or Approval of Court. — The English Statute does not require the trustee to obtain leave of court to make a sale, nor does it expressly require approval by the court of sales that may be made, but the intention that the matter shall be under the control of the court clearly appears from other provisions.²

The Bankruptcy Law of the United States requires property to be sold subject to the approval of the court, "when practicable," and provides that it shall not be sold otherwise than subject to the approval of the court for less than seventy-five per cent. of its appraised value.³

Some of the State Insolvency Laws require leave of court to be obtained before a sale can be made.⁴

1. Authority to Sell — England. — 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 56; Turquand v. Board of Trade, 11 App. Cas. 286, affirming sub nom. Ex p. Board of Trade, 15 Q. B. D. 196; Ex p. Lloyd, 47 L. T. N. S. 64.

Canada. — Bénard v. Dupuy, 3 Montreal Leg. N. 93.

United States. — The bankruptcy law of 1898 is not very explicit in this regard, though it undoubtedly authorizes trustees to sell. Thus, section 47, par. a, declares that one of their duties shall be "to collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees." Another provision (section 70, par. c) relates to conveyances by trustees of property sold; and Rule 18 prescribes the mode of exercising the power of sale by trustees. The following cases recognize the trustees' power to sell under the Act of 1898: In re Worland, 92 Fed. Rep. 893; In re Pittelkow, 92 Fed. Rep. 901; In re Styer, 98 Fed. Rep. 290.

2. Power of Court to Control Sales in England. — Section 56 of the English statute (46 & 47 Vict., c. 52) declares that "subject to the provisions of this act, the trustee may * * * sell all or any part of the property of the bankrupt." Section 89 requires him to have regard to the wishes of creditors in dealing with the bankrupt's property. And section 90 provides that any person aggrieved by any act of the trustee may apply to the court for redress.

(2) Property Subject to Sale. — The terms of the statutes include all the debtor's property, real as well as personal, except such as may be exempt.¹

Where Property Has Been Fraudulently Conveyed by the debtor, the assignee or trustee may sell and convey his interest in it, without himself first bringing an action to set the conveyance aside.²

(3) Manner and Terms of Sale. — The General Rule is that the court of bankruptcy or insolvency has control of the debtor's entire property and may direct the sale to be made in such manner as will, in its opinion, protect the rights and interests of all concerned.³

Auction or Private Sale. — In England the trustee may sell either at auction or private sale.⁴ In the United States sales by trustees in bankruptcy must be at public auction, unless otherwise ordered.⁵

Cash or Credit. — The sale should be for cash, unless the court authorizes a sale on credit.⁶

Sale in Parcels or En Masse. — The court may direct the property to be sold as an entirety or in parcels, the rule being to adopt the mode which will realize the best price.⁷

Doubtful Claims may be sold for less than their face value.⁸

special provision is usually made concerning perishable property.¹

If the Property Is Encumbered the court may direct it to be sold free from the incumbrance, and transfer the lien or charge to the proceeds, if it deems that mode more beneficial to the general creditors, and not injurious to the lien creditors.²

(4) Who May Purchase.—The trustee or other person occupying an official relation to the estate is not allowed to become a purchaser,³ without obtaining leave of court or the consent of the creditors;⁴ and the disqualification has been held to extend also to the trustee's partner⁵ and the bankrupt's solicitor.⁶

The Bankrupt himself may become the purchaser.⁷

(5) Title and Rights of Purchasers. — The title of a purchaser is not defeated by mere delay of the assignee in making the sale,¹ or by noncompliance with merely directory provisions of the statute,² or by the fact that the sale was made after a composition proceeding was commenced.³ The purchaser has the right to a good title, and cannot be compelled to complete his purchase if there are irregularities which may make his title questionable;⁴ but he cannot, in any case, acquire any better title than the bankrupt had.⁵ He is also entitled to a diminution of price in case of a deficiency in quantity.⁶ If the sale was made subject to incumbrances, the purchaser cannot avoid a mortgage on the ground of fraud or want of consideration.⁷

(6) Setting Aside Sale. — A court of bankruptcy or insolvency has power to set aside a sale, or may refuse to confirm it, on the same principles in general as apply to other judicial sales.⁸

(7) Resale. — If a sale is not completed, or if it is set aside for any reason, the assignee or trustee may resell the property¹ at the risk of the purchaser at the first sale, if the resale was rendered necessary by his fault.²

g. ARBITRATION AND COMPROMISE. — The statutes generally confer express authority on assignees and trustees to submit to arbitration or to compromise any claim either in favor of or against the estate.³

h. ACTIONS — (1) Actions by Assignee or Trustee — (a) Right to Maintain. — The right to sue for the recovery of debts due and property belonging to a bankrupt or insolvent is a necessary incident to the title which vests in the assignee or trustee.⁴

(b) Evidence of Official Character. — Under statutes which require an assignment to transfer the debtor's title, the assignment or a certified copy thereof is conclusive evidence of the assignee's right to sue.⁵

(2) Actions Against Assignee or Trustee. — Persons who are injured by an assignee or trustee in the exercise of his powers, as by the conversion of their property, etc., may sue him therefor. This principle has frequently been recognized in actions brought against assignees and has probably never been questioned.⁶ It has been held, however, that an assignee is an officer of the court by which he is appointed, and that leave of court must be obtained before a party can sue him.⁷

Action on Disallowed Claim. — In some jurisdictions creditors whose claims have been disallowed are authorized to test the validity thereof by bringing suit against the assignee or trustee.⁸

(3) Intervention and Substitution in Pending Actions — (a) Actions Brought by Bankrupt. — An assignee or trustee has the right to prosecute to final judgment any action brought by the bankrupt and pending at the time of the adjudication, if the subject-matter of the action constitutes an asset of the bankrupt's estate;⁹ but he does not, by allowing the action to proceed in the bankrupt's

name, lose his right to whatever may be recovered,¹ unless his conduct amounts to laches and third persons have acquired an interest in the judgment.²

(b) Actions Brought Against Bankrupt. — The assignee or trustee may also assume the defense of any action pending against the bankrupt which may result in a diminution of the estate,³ and if he neglects to do so, the plaintiff on recovering a judgment therein obtains a prior right to the property affected;⁴ but if the trustee had no opportunity to defend the action, as where the bankrupt confesses judgment, he may still intervene and claim the proceeds of a sale under execution.⁵

(4) Jurisdiction — (a) Under Former Statutes. — In actions by assignees appointed under former bankruptcy laws of the United States, the question frequently arose as to whether the state or the federal courts had jurisdiction. Cases involving the construction and application of the bankruptcy law are clearly within the jurisdiction of the federal courts, without regard to the citizenship of the parties, as cases "arising under the laws of the United States," and it has frequently been so held.⁶ In cases which did not involve federal questions, and in which there was no matter of diverse citizenship to give the federal courts jurisdiction, there was a conflict of opinion. Under a provision of the judiciary act giving to the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction "of all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy,"⁷ it was several times held that the state courts were wholly without jurisdiction;¹ but it was afterwards authoritatively decided that the state courts had jurisdiction in such cases, and that a provision of the bankruptcy law giving the circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction where a certain amount was in controversy did not take away the jurisdiction of the state courts, but merely created a concurrent jurisdiction.²

(b) Jurisdiction under Act 1898 — aa. DISTRICT COURTS OF UNITED STATES. — The Act of 1898 contains several provisions respecting the jurisdiction in actions by trustees, as follows: Section 2, clause 7, gives the district courts of the United States, as courts of bankruptcy, jurisdiction to "cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto, except as herein otherwise provided." Section 23, paragraph a, provides that "the United States circuit courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy between trustees, as such, and adverse claimants concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees, in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted, and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants;" and paragraph b provides that "suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt whose estate is being administered by such trustee might have brought or prosecuted them, if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant." And finally, sections 26 and 27 authorize the trustees, by leave of court, to submit to arbitration or to compromise, respectively, any controversy arising in the administration of the estate. The question of the jurisdiction of the district courts under these provisions has occasioned much conflict of opinion, but it has recently been determined by the Supreme Court of the United States that paragraph b of section 23 limits and controls the jurisdiction of all courts over controversies not strictly or properly a part of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and that the district courts, therefore, have no jurisdiction of actions to collect debts due the bankrupt or to set aside transfers made by him "unless by the consent of the proposed defendant."³ Before this decision the rulings of the circuit and district courts on the question were very conflicting. In some cases it was held that the limitation was found in paragraph b of section 23, and that no action could be brought or maintained in a district court unless the ordinary requirements of federal jurisdiction should exist.¹ Other authorities held that the limitation was to be found in sections 26 and 27 relating to arbitration and compromise, and that the only jurisdiction of the district courts in regard to controversies between trustees and strangers respecting the assets of the estate consisted in permitting or directing trustees to submit such controversies to arbitration or to compromise them.² Another view was that, while the limitation was found in section 23, that section related only to actions which the bankrupt himself could have maintained — that is, causes of action which accrued in favor of the bankrupt before the adjudication — and that as to causes of action accruing to the trustee in his official capacity, the district court had jurisdiction.³ Still another line of authorities, without determining what, if any, limitation on the jurisdiction of the district courts was imposed by other portions of the act, held that section 23 contained no such limitation, but related exclusively to the circuit courts, and was intended to govern cases which were not within the territorial jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.⁴

bb. CIRCUIT COURTS OF UNITED STATES. — The circuit courts have jurisdiction of actions at law and suits in equity to recover debts due the bankrupt or to establish the title of the estate to property claimed by third persons, in any case where the facts requisite generally to the jurisdiction of such courts exist,⁵ except so far as that jurisdiction is limited by the bankruptcy law.⁶

cc. STATE COURTS. — The jurisdiction conferred on the federal courts in actions between trustees in bankruptcy and strangers to the bankruptcy proceedings is not exclusive, but it is well settled that the state courts have concurrent jurisdiction.⁷

(5) Limitation of Actions. — The special limitation prescribed by the bankruptcy laws is applicable to all judicial controversies between the trustee or assignee and any person whose interest is adverse to his in behalf of the bankrupt's estate.⁸ Within this principle, such special limitation applies to actions brought by the trustee or assignee against third persons to collect the assets of the estate,¹ even though the action is brought exclusively for the benefit of another person;² but it does not apply to actions founded on the assignee's dealings with the estate after it came into his hands,³ or to actions in respect to interests existing in the bankrupt himself,⁴ or to actions brought by or against the bankrupt, before bankruptcy, and to which the assignee became a party,⁵ though it is applicable to writs of error by assignees to judgments against the bankrupts.⁶

XIII. ASSIGNMENT. — By the recent bankruptcy laws no assignment of the bankrupt's property is required, but the adjudication itself operates to divest his title.¹ Under the earlier statutes an assignment was necessary,² as it still is under some of the state insolvency laws.³

By Whom Made. — The assignment is to be executed by the person designated by the statute, usually the judge or some officer of the court.⁴

XIV. COMPOSITIONS — 1. Authority to Make Compositions. — Bankruptcy and insolvency laws generally provide that the debtor may make a composition with his creditors on such terms as they may mutually agree on, thereby arresting the bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding, and enabling the debtor to obtain his discharge on paying the sums agreed on.⁵

When Proposal May Be Made. — In England a proposal for a composition may be made at any time after the adjudication.⁶ In the United States the bankrupt may offer terms of composition to his creditors after, but not before, he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of creditors, and has filed in

3. Assignment Required by State Insolvency Laws. — See the various local statutes.

4. Who May Execute Assignment. — The bankruptcy law of 1867 provided that the judges should execute the assignment, except where there was no "opposing interest," in which case the register might act. In re Wylie, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 137, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 19,109; Hale v. Christy, 24 Neb. 746.

The Signature of the Judge was held not to be essential under this statute, though the provision was that the judge should convey "by an instrument under his hand." This pro-

court a schedule of his property and a list of his creditors.¹

The Theory of a Composition is that the cash value of the bankrupt's estate is substantially divided among the creditors in proportion to their respective debts.²

Constitutionality. — The provision in the bankruptcy law authorizing compositions is held to be within the constitutional power of Congress.³

2. Composition Meetings — a. CONVENING CREDITORS. — When a composition is proposed, the proposal must be submitted to the creditors for their action, and therefore a meeting must be called for that purpose.⁴ If, for any reason, the object of the meeting fails, or other matters afterwards arise requiring consideration, a second meeting may be called.⁵

b. INVESTIGATION OF DEBTOR'S AFFAIRS. — In considering the proposal, the creditors have the right to make such an inquiry into the debtor's affairs as will aid them in determining whether or not the composition should be accepted.⁶ Accordingly, the debtor may be examined,⁷ and he may also be required to submit his books and papers for examination;⁸ but it has been held that third persons cannot be compelled to testify.⁹

c. RIGHT TO VOTE. — The right to vote on a proposal for a composition depends on the same considerations in general as govern in the election of a trustee or assignee, that is, it is limited to creditors who have proved their claims, and are not secured or entitled to priority in respect thereto.¹⁰

1. When Proposal May Be Made in United States. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 12, par. a.

In this respect the present statute differs from the late one, which permitted a composition either before or after an adjudication. See Act June 22, 1874 (18 U. S. Stat. at L. 178), § 17.

In Massachusetts an offer of composition may be made at the time of filing a petition in insolvency, or at any other stage of the proceedings. Van Ingen v. Beal, 165 Mass. 582. Compare the statutes in other jurisdictions.

d. NUMBER AND AMOUNT OF CONSENTING CREDITORS. — The English Statute requires the consent of a majority in number and three-fourths in value of all the creditors who have proved their claims, to constitute an acceptance of a composition.¹

The Bankruptcy Law of the United States requires a majority in number and amount.²

And the State Insolvency Laws generally contain the same requirement.³

3. Terms of Composition. — The terms of a composition are a matter for the determination of a majority of the creditors, and their decision is conclusive, where there is nothing to show fraud, mistake, or accident.⁴

4. Confirmation of Composition — a. NECESSITY. — After the required number and amount of creditors have assented to the proposed composition, it must be confirmed by the court before it can become operative.⁵

United States. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 12, par. d.

The Late Bankruptcy Law provided that if it should at any time appear to the court that a composition could not, "in consequence of legal difficulties, or for any sufficient cause, proceed without injustice or undue delay to the creditors or to the debtor," the court might refuse to confirm it. The relation to the debtor of the creditors favoring the composition, and the relative number thereof as compared with those who oppose the composition, should also be considered. In re Weber Furniture Co., 13 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 529, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,330.

Benefit to Particular Creditors. — A composition will not be disapproved merely because the disapproval would specially benefit the objecting creditor. In re Scott, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 73, 4 Cent. L. J. 29, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,519.

But it has been held that, where a composition was opposed by two creditors, who had theretofore successfully opposed a discharge, confirmation should be refused. Matter of Hannahs, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 533, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,033.

False Schedule of Creditors. — It is said not to be a ground of opposition for a respite, that the debtor placed on his schedule parties who were not his creditors; because, by so doing, he cannot prejudice the real creditors, any of whom, though not on his schedule, can, by making oath, vote at the meeting. Weems v. Delta Moss Co., 33 La. Ann. 973.

Offer of Trivial Amount. — Under the Massachusetts statute requiring the judge to confirm a composition, if it "appears to have been duly assented to, and to be consistent with justice and for the interests of the creditors," confirmation will not be ordered where the proposal is to distribute $4.09 among twenty-two creditors aggregating $4096. Hill v. McKim, 168 Mass. 100.

2. Debtor Not Entitled to Discharge — England. — 53 & 54 Vict., c. 71, § 3, par. (9).

United States. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 12, par. (d).

But under the Act of June 22, 1874 (18 U. S. Stat. at L. 178), § 17, a debtor could make a composition, though, by reason of preference or otherwise, he would not be able to obtain his discharge. In re Haskell, 11 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 164, 1 Cent. L. J. 531, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,192; In re Troth, 19 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 253, 2 N. J. L. 147, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,188; Matter of Odell, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 247, 16 Nat. Bankr.

Want of Good Faith, etc. — If the offer to compromise and its acceptance are not made in good faith, or have been made or procured otherwise than as the statute provides, or by any means, promises, or acts which are forbidden, confirmation will be refused.¹

Other Matters. — The English statute provides that the court "shall refuse to approve the proposal" for the reasons stated above, but that "in any other case the court may either approve or refuse to approve the proposal."² The statute of the United States provides that the judge "shall confirm a composition" where none of the grounds for refusing confirmation exist.³

5. Payment of Dividends — a MODE OF PAYMENT. — The provisions relating to compositions contemplate payment in money of the dividends agreed on, and a composition cannot be performed by giving notes.⁴

b. TIME OF PAYMENT. — Though payment cannot be made with the notes of the debtor, nevertheless immediate payment is not required. The dividends may be made payable at a future time or times, and the debtor may give his notes for the several amounts, with or without security, unless the statute provides otherwise.⁵

c. CLAIMS PAYABLE — Secured Claims. — Where a creditor holds security for his claim, but the amount of the claim exceeds the value of the security, he is entitled to participate with the other creditors as to so much of his claim as is not covered by the security.⁶

Reg. 501, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,427; In re Joseph, 24 Fed. Rep. 137.

The Interest of the Creditors Will Be Considered as well as the conduct of the debtor, and the court is not bound to refuse its approval because the debtor had committed offenses which would have prevented his discharge. Ex p. Kearsley, 18 Q. B. D. 168; Re Bottomley, 10 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 262.

As to the acts or omissions which will bar the right to discharge, see infra, this title, Discharge of Debtor—Grounds for Refusing Discharge.

Under this provision the court may refuse its approval in all cases. In re Burr, (1892) 2 Q. B. 467.

B. D. 544; Re Barlow, 3 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 304; Re McTear, 5 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 182.

A proposal has been held unreasonable where it provided that the debtor "shall be discharged when the committee of inspection shall so resolve." Ex p. Clark, 13 Q. B. D. 426.

The court may refuse to approve a proposal where a large part of the debts had not been proved, or where the court thinks that the proofs require investigation. Ex p. Rogers, 13 Q. B. D. 438. A Deposit in Bank and notice thereof to the creditors is a sufficient tender to them. Noyes v. Dobson, 30 Kan. 361.

5. Time of Payment. — The English statute does not require immediate payment. This appears from the provision as to defaults in the payment of instalments due under the composition, and from other provisions respecting the terms on which compositions may be made. See 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 23; 53 & 54 Vict., c. 71, § 3.

Under the late bankruptcy law of the United States it was held that payments might be made in instalments or otherwise in future, with or without security. Matter of Wilson, 16 Blatchf. (U. The present statute, however, requires that the consideration to be paid by the bankrupt to his creditors shall have been deposited in such place as shall be designated by and subject to the order of the judge. Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 12, par. b.

6. Rights of Secured Creditors. — Paret v. Ticknor, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 111, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 315, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,711; Flower v.

Claims Entitled to Priority must be provided for, under the bankruptcy law of the United States, by a deposit of the necessary amount.¹

An Unliquidated Claim may be provided for under a composition by permitting the prosecution of a pending suit in the state court, or by ordering an inquiry in the matter at the bar of the bankruptcy court.²

Agreement Not to Press for Payment. — A creditor is not precluded from sharing under a composition by the fact that he had loaned money to the debtor with the understanding that payment should not be pressed, there having been no definite agreement deferring payment, or any misrepresentation to other creditors.³

Proof of Claims. — Where the statute requires a meeting to be called within a certain time, for the purpose of hearing proof of unproved claims, and providing that the money deposited on claims then remaining unproved shall be refunded to the debtor or person depositing the same, a creditor, on failure to present his claim at that hearing, loses his right to prove it.⁴

d. DEFAULT IN MAKING PAYMENTS. — The English statute provides that, if default is made in payment of any instalment due in pursuance of a composition, the court may, on the application of any person interested, adjudge the debtor a bankrupt and annul the composition, but without prejudice to the validity of any sale, disposition, or payment duly made, or thing duly done under or in pursuance of the composition.⁵ Under the present bankruptcy law of the United States it would seem that no question as to default in payment can arise, because that statute requires a deposit, subject to the order of the judge, of the consideration to be paid by the bankrupt, and provides for the distribution thereof as the judge shall direct, on the confirmation of the composition.⁶ Under the late statute it was held that a composition made and confirmed did not take the proceeding out of the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, and that in case of a default in any payment the creditor could not sue for his debt in an ordinary action, but that his remedy was on motion made in a summary manner in the bankruptcy court.⁷

1. Claims Entitled to Priority. — Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 12, par. b.

The late statute did not impose on the debtor, as a condition precedent to a composition, that he should pay in full all claims entitled to priority under such section, and it was held that the owner of such a claim could have priority in payment only out of the assets that would go to the debtor's assignee. 5. Default in Payment — Rule in England. — 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 23, par. (3). And see Ex p. Jarvis, 10 Ch. D. 179.

Formerly the rule in England was that the effect of a default in the payment of a composition was to remit the creditor to his original rights, so that he could sue for the whole debt, giving credit for the amount of the composition received. 6. SECURITY FOR PAYMENT. — In some jurisdictions a debtor may be required to give security for the payments to be made to the creditors.¹

6. Effect of Composition. — A composition accepted by the creditors and approved by the court operates as a discharge of the debtor from all debts which are provable in bankruptcy against him, but it does not affect any debt or liability not so dischargeable, unless the particular creditor assents to the composition.² It also prevents the divesting of the bankrupt's title, if made before an adjudication of bankruptcy, or, if made after the adjudication, the bankrupt's title reverts in him.³

7. Secret Agreements with and Preference of Creditors. — It is unlawful for the debtor to make any secret agreement to pay a creditor a greater proportion of his debt than the other creditors receive, for the purpose of obtaining his consent to the composition, and, if he does so, the composition may be set aside.⁴ So, too, any note or other obligation that he may give to the creditor is void, as in fraud of the law,⁵ and any payment made pursuant to such an agreement or understanding may be recovered by the debtor, or by injured creditors, or by the assignee.⁶ But an agreement to pay an agent of a creditor

Erroneously Stating a Creditor's Address in the schedule, in consequence of which such creditor did not receive notice of the bankruptcy proceeding and therefore did not prove his debt, does not furnish cause for setting aside a composition, unless the erroneous statement of the creditor's address was fraudulent. In re Rudnick, 93 Fed. Rep. 787.

Fraud is the Only Ground on which a composition can be set aside under the bankruptcy law of the United States. The provision of section 13, authorizing the judge to set aside a composition if it shall be made to appear "that fraud was practiced" in procuring it, defines exclusively the ground on which he may act and limits the general authority given by section 2 to "set aside compositions." In re Rudnick, 93 Fed. Default in Payment of Instalments. — It is sometimes provided by statutes which permit the consideration of a composition to be paid in instalments, that the composition may be set aside if default is made in the payment of any instalment due.²

Failure to Comply with the Statute regulating compositions has been held ground for setting them aside.³

d. EFFECT AS TO PRIOR ACTS. — When a composition is set aside all acts regularly done pursuant to the resolution are valid.⁴

XV. DISCHARGE OF DEBTOR — 1. Right to Discharge — a. IN GENERAL. — The right of a debtor to a discharge, when it exists at all, exists only by virtue of the statute creating it; and to determine whether, in any case, a debtor has such a right, reference must be had to the statute governing the matter. One of the principal objects of all bankruptcy laws is to discharge from liability debtors who are unable to pay all their debts in full.⁵ In England a very wide discretion is given to the court, either to grant or refuse an absolute discharge, or to grant a conditional discharge and afterwards to modify the order.⁶ In the United States the court is obliged to grant a discharge unless certain facts appear.⁷

b. SURRENDER OF ALL PROPERTY. — One of the chief requisites to the right of a debtor to be discharged from his debts under the bankruptcy or insolvency laws is the surrender to his creditors of all his property which is liable for the payment of his debts.⁸

1. Injustice or Undue Delay. — 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 23, par. (3).

This provision was contained in the late bankruptcy law of the United States. Act June 22, 1874 (18 U. S. Stat. at L. 178), § 17.

Mere Inadequacy of Consideration is not a ground for setting aside a composition. In re Shaw, 9 Fed. Rep. 495.

2. Default in Payment of Instalments Due. — 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 23, par. (3).

3. Failure to Comply with Statute. — In Lay v. His Creditors, 48 La. Ann. 1053, it was held that a respite should be set aside where the creditor failed to file a schedule of his assets as required by the statute when demand therefor was made by the creditors.

4. Effect as to Prior Acts. — 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 23, par. (3); Ex p. Hamlin, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 571, 16 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 320, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,993; In re Shaw, 9 Fed. Rep. 495.

5. Object of Bankruptcy Laws Stated. — Day v. Bardwell, 97 Mass. 248.

The Repeal of the Statute while an application for a discharge is pending deprives the court of power to grant it unless the repealing act contains a saving clause. State v. Shinn, 5 N. J. L. 637.

6. Rule as to Granting Discharges in England. — 53 & 54 Vict., c. 71, § 8.

The discretion of the court in this matter is not unlimited, but judicial, with reference to the particular circumstances of the case. Ex p. Cooper, 3 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 228.

And if it takes the wrong view of the facts and exercises its discretion thereon, the court of appeal will review the decision and vary it as may seem just. Re Sultzberger, 4 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 82; Re Rankin, 5 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 23; Re Shackleton, 6 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 304; Re Freeman, 7 Mor. Bankr. Cas. 38; Ex p. Castle Mail Packets Co., 18 Q. B. D. 154; In re Stainton, 19 Q. B. D. 182; Re Swabey, 76 L. T. N. S. 534.

Partnerships. — A partner may obtain his individual discharge, where the partnership was adjudged bankrupt on the petition of the parties. In re Meyers, 97 Fed. Rep. 757.

Corporations. — It has been questioned whether a corporation is entitled to a discharge under the present bankruptcy law of the United States; but the discussion of the matter was addressed to the necessity or expediency of permitting the discharge, rather than to the provisions of the statute. In re Marshall Paper Co., 95 Fed. Rep. 419, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 653.

The relevant provisions of the statute are as follows: "Any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, or mercantile pursuits, owing debts to the amount of one thousand dollars or over, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt * * * and shall be subject to the provisions and entitled to the benefits of this Act." Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544), § 4, par. 3. "Any person" who has been adjudged a bankrupt may file an application for a discharge. Section 14, par. a. "The words 'persons' shall include corporations, except where otherwise specified." Section 1, cl. 19.

8. Surrender of All Unexempt Property Essential

c. AMOUNT OF INDEBTEDNESS. — In some jurisdictions the discharge of a debtor is not permitted if his debts do not exceed a designated sum.¹

d. CONSENT OF CREDITORS. — It is sometimes provided that a discharge shall not be granted where the debts exceed in amount a designated proportion of the assets, unless the creditors consent.² Again, it is sometimes left

Under the Bankruptcy Law of 1867, in proceedings commenced within a certain time after the passage of the law, a debtor whose assets did not pay fifty per cent. of the claims against his estate was not entitled to be discharged unless by assent of a majority in number and value of his creditors who had proved their claims. Re Wilson, 2 Lowell (U. Thus, the Minnesota act provides for the discharge of the debtor only from the claims of creditors who will file releases of the amounts due them, after receiving their pro rata shares of the estate, while in New York the discharge must be consented to by one or more of his creditors, whose claims amount to two-thirds of all the debts.¹ In some jurisdictions the creditors determine by vote, at a creditors' meeting, whether a discharge shall be granted to the debtor.²

made.¹ Even the omission of a debt from the schedule will not exempt it from the operation of the discharge, if there was no fraud in the omission.²

Extinguishment of Debt or Liability. — The effect of a discharge, however, is not Wisconsin. — Wisconsin State Grange v. Kniffen, 90 Wis. 14.

Debts Payable at Future Time are barred by the discharge equally with those which are payable presently. Mooney v. Detrick, 85 Cal. 549.

A Debt Payable in Labor is barred by a discharge. Hart's Case, 1 Browne (Pa.) 298.

The Payee of a Note Who Has Indorsed It Over, and who is afterwards obliged to pay to the indorsee the balance due, after deducting the dividend received from the estate of the insolvent maker, cannot recover such amount from the maker. The indorsement does not create a new debt against the maker, but is merely a transfer of the old debt which was discharged by the insolvency proceeding. Columbia Falls Brick Co. v. Glidden, 157 Mass. 175.

Debts Provable in Former Proceeding. — In Massachusetts, when a discharge has been refused, but afterwards a second proceeding is instituted and a discharge is granted therein, it does not bar any debts that were provable under the former proceedings, unless those to whom such debts were due elected to prove them under the new proceeding. Gilbert v. Hebard, 8 Met. (Mass.) 129.

The Assignment of a Claim pending the insolvency proceeding does not withdraw such claim from the operation of the discharge, though the assignee did not know that the proceeding was pending. This rests on the principle that subsequent events cannot defeat jurisdiction after it has once attached. Perkins v. Quint, (N. H. 1899) 45 Atl. Rep. 143.

A Claim for Conversion of Personal Property is barred by a discharge in bankruptcy. Sumner v. Richie, 54 Iowa 554; Brickford v. Barnard, 8 Allen (Mass.) 314; Gunter v. Greenfield, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 191; Cole v. Roach, 37 Tex. 413.

The Obligation to Return Specific Property to the owner is not a debt which a discharge in bankruptcy will affect. Falkland v. St. Nicholas Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 145, reversing 21 Hun (N. Y.) 450.

Cancellation of Judgments. — A debtor who has received his discharge may, under the New York statute, obtain an order canceling of record judgments which have been rendered against him. Wheeler v. Emmeluth, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 369.

Scire Facias to Revive a Judgment entered before a discharge in bankruptcy is barred by the discharge. Throop v. Griffin, 180 Pa. St. 452.

A Set-off, acquired by the maker of a note against the payee before notice of its transfer, is not lost by the payee's subsequent discharge in bankruptcy. Harwell v. Steel, 17 Ala. 372.

The Burden of Proof, when it is claimed, in an action to recover a debt, that the defendant has been released from liability by a discharge in insolvency, is on the defendant to show that the debt is such as would be released by the discharge, though the statute makes the certificate of discharge prima facie evidence of the regularity thereof. Herrlich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472.

What Law Governs. — The law in force when a discharge is obtained governs as to its operation and effect, and not the law in force when the insolvency proceedings were begun. Batten v. Sisson, 133 Mass. 557.

A Mere Right in Equity, such as the right of a seller to rescind a contract of sale on the ground of fraud, is not affected by the discharge of the purchaser in bankruptcy. Smith v. Babcock, 2 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 246, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,009.

Within this provision the rent of a boarding-house kept by a single woman without a family is not a claim for necessaries. Prentice v. Richards, 8 Gray (Mass.) 226.

Nor is a claim for articles delivered to a firm a claim for necessaries, though the article were actually used in the families of the partners. Drake v. Bailey, 5 Allen (Mass.) 210.

If a Judgment Is Recovered on a Debt for Necessaries, the debt is merged in the judgment, and is barred by the discharge. Bangs v. Watson, 9 Gray (Mass.) 211.

to extinguish the debt or liability, but merely to take away the creditor's right of action.¹ This principle will be considered presently in another connection.²

Pending Actions. — The general rule as to the discharge of existing debts applies to claims in suit at the time the discharge was granted, and precludes the entry thereafter of any personal judgment against the defendant.³

(b) Alimony and Maintenance of Children. — It is generally held that bankruptcy laws are not intended to relieve a debtor from his natural obligation to support his wife and children, and that therefore a discharge will not release him from liability to pay alimony which has been awarded against him,⁴ or an annuity which a husband had agreed to pay his wife under a separation agreement,⁵ or to comply with a decree entered against him before his bankruptcy, requiring him to make periodical payments for the support of his infant children or others whom he may lawfully be required to support.⁶ And the same has been held in respect to a promise by the father of a bastard to make regular payments to the mother for the support of the child.⁷

(c) Judgments. — So far as they create a personal liability, judgments recovered before the commencement of a bankruptcy or insolvency proceeding are barred by a discharge the same as other debts owing by the judgment debtor.⁸ It follows from this rule that an execution issued after the discharge

See contra, Hill v. Robbins, 1 Mich. N. P. 305. Compare the various state insolvency laws.

The bankruptcy law of the United States provides that "a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as * * * (3) have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor, if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy." Fider v. Mannheim, (Minn. 1899) 81 N. W. Rep. 2; Act July 1, 1898 (30 U. S. Stat. at L. 544). § 17.

1. Debts Not Extinguished by Discharge. — The principle that a discharge does not extinguish debts was applied where the bankrupt, after his discharge, became entitled through the death of his father to a distributive share of the father's estate. It was held that the amount of the indebtedness of the bankrupt to his father's estate should be deducted from the amount of his distributive share. Wilson v. Kelly, 16 S. Car. 216.

Another application of this principle is that no one but the bankrupt can plead the discharge. The bankrupt may, if he chooses, treat his covenants and obligations as still binding on him. Bush v. Stanley, 122 Ill. 406.

of a judgment debtor, on a judgment rendered before the discharge, is void,¹ and if the goods of the bankrupt are seized under the execution the judgment creditor is liable to the bankrupt as a trespasser ab initio, though the officer will be protected by the writ if it is regular on its face.² If, however, the bankrupt voluntarily pays the amount of the execution, without any mistake as to his rights, he cannot recover it back again.³
